MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Stock to Keep Benches Full.

We are usually very glad of the bench room that the throwing out of early 'bums affords, and there is always plenty to fill up with. Five to 7-inch Bermuda lilies that have been in the cold frames, and if you have no warm house the 7 to 9-inch plants may as well come in; they will not make much more progress in a cool house for the next month than they would in a frame with the glass on.

Japan Lilies.

Those who grow the Japan longiflorum most successfully, by that I mean those who get them in in good time for Easter and get a good height on them, do not bring them into heat till they are well rooted in the frames, and then when they get them in they give them a strong heat. I have seen Japan longiflorum brought in as late as the middle of December, and, with little or no growth, and they overtook and passed in height and earliness a batch that had been brought in the first of November. Last spring many will remember that there were fine lots of lilies that flowered perfectly, both the black-stemmed "giganteum" and a bulb called "multiflorum" that gave me seven or eight flowers, but they had but ten to fifteen-inch stems. By putting them in pans and azalea pots they all went, but to have them as dwarf as that is not desirable. In my own case I think it was bringing them into a house at the end of October and keeping them about 50 degrees at night, when they were but poorly rooted. They were in plenty of time for Easter; in fact, you might say that with their dwarfness they flowered prematurely. Now I don't want to pretend to be an unquestioned authority on this subject, but I do think that the best way to treat the Japan longiflorum is to keep them in the cold frame protected from hard freezing, till the middle of December, and then, after two weeks in a cool house, after being brought in, give them a brisk heat of 60 to 65 degree at night.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine.

The Lorraine begonia is likely to be as great a favorite again this winter as for the past four or five years. Not only as a single plant is it desirable, but for basket and mantel decorations it is most valuable. Those who have them now in a healthy state need fear no mishap; and from now till Christmas they do a lot of growing. Any small plants that need shifting should be attended to at once. There is no more shading necessary. Keep them about 55 degrees at night, and when watering do not wet the leaves. Plants in 5 and 6-inch pots might with benefit be raised up on inverted 6-inch pots. They can be watered more carefully and the lower growth will be all the better.

Poinsettias.

I have often said that you must not disturb the roots of poinsettias after the middle of October and that I know from experience, so I hope you have all the plants in 6-inch pots fixed some weeks ago. Pans of these are now what is mostly asked for, from seven to twelve inches. If you have small plants in 2½-inch pots they can still be put in pans because you need not disturb the roots and the plants are so small they will not suffer as a plant two feet high would. It should not be necessary to say that the poinsettia wants at all times a high temperature, but 60 degrees at night keeps them in excellent leaf and develops their bracts. The yellow leaf is more often caused by starved roots than cold, and if you have any in 5 or 6-inch pots and later on they begin to show the slightest sign of the foliage going, give them liquid manure twice a week.

Cyclamen.

Another of our favorite Christmas plants is now about a pronounced success or a failure. If the cyclamen foliage is healthy and perfect buds showing Antirrhinums.

The antirrhinum (snap dragon) has been in favor for several years as a decorative cut flower. They can succeed early chrysanthemums. As they are strong growing plants, the same soil will do with the addition of a little rotted manure, or a sprinkling of bone dust. Plants that you have now in small pots, either from cuttings or seedlings, will soon be in flower.

To digress a moment, the chrysanthemum is a most fascinating flower to grow, but if your houses are too far away from a market for pot plants, such as lilies, azaleas, Easter roses, etc., or bedding plants, then the beautiful 'mums leave you with a lot of vacant bench room, more than you need for young stock of carnations and roses, and there is sometimes an unprofitable interval of a few months. The antirrhinum is a plant that will fill up till you need the bench, in April and May.

Sweet Peas.

I was quite an old man before I learned how to grow sweet peas, to have them in flower at the holidays and during the succeeding dark winter months. We used to sow them at the posts in a carnation house in October, or plant them there from 2 or 3-inch pots. They would send up a growth which was paid little attention and we always waited for the lateral growth which started at the base of the one or two plants. That lateral growth came along slowly and it was April before any flowers were up, you need have no failure after this. After good, bad and indifferent success with these plants, we have about 1,000 in 5, 6 and 7-inch pots that some good friends have pronounced about perfect. I still believe in plunging them in a few inches of tobacco stems and spraying them on bright mornings and giving them plenty of room on the bench; no more shade is required. Just now 50 degrees at night will do nicely for them and after December 1, when the bulk of the flowers are showing above the foliage, 55 degrees should be given them.

cut. The original growth from the seed had long ago perished. Now I would not go at length into this "has been" story, only I know others have not flowered sweet peas in any better way. If you have plants now in 3-inch pots, two plants is enough in a pot; plant them now in four or five inches of soil on a bench. Let the two plants be eight or nine inches from another two, and the rows of plants one foot apart; train them up just as you would smilax. Perhaps a string for every vine would be ideal, but the two vines on a string will do. The principal point is to let no bottom growth or lateral growth get a start; pinch it off as soon as it appears. Very soon, if the lateral growth is kept pinched off, you will get flowers and if your house is light and you keep a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees, you will pick flowers by Christmas. We live and learn. Few are pioneers in progress, mostly all copyists; but he that will not learn will soon be a back number.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

STOKESIA CYANEA.

Stokesia cyanea is a plant that has rapidly come to the front the last two or three years, and deservedly so, says Herbert Greensmith, of Dreer's Riverton nurseries. Although an American plant introduced or discovered in 1766, it does not appear to have been generally cultivated. In this plant the most wonderful developments have been made as regards the size of flower. Nicholson's Dictionary of Gardening describes it as being one inch across, few or solitary; some English catalogues say two or three inches and must be lifted in the fall and placed in the greenhouse to see it bloom. Horsford describes it as "a plant of the aster family, with blue flowers an inch or so wide;" and A. Perry says, "A sweetly pretty autumn-flowering perennial of great merit; habit erect, two feet, large lavender blue flowers with a reddish center, fully two inches across."

A great deal of surprise and rejoicing has been occasioned the last two or three years, Mr. Greensmith told the Florists'

Club of Philadelphia, over what is described as an early flowering form which some want to name Praecox in order to indicate that it is an early flowering variety. "I have noticed, I believe, what purports to be this very same thing in 14,000 or 15,000 plants grown at Riverton last summer. A few plants flowered very early and set seed and died down, that is, the tops died down. While the majority of the plants came into bloom later and so continued until late frosts completely cut them down, other plants again, though full of buds and in good robust condition, did not flower at all. These plants were all grown on high, sandy ground and were the admiration of all who saw them from July to hard frost in November. A warm, sandy soil is recommended as being best adapted to their culture, but two years ago I raised 3,000 or 4,000 plants from seed, which were picked off into trays as soon as large enough to handle, one inch apart, and from these trays they were planted out into the open ground in a very moist, damp spot. By the latter part of July they commenced to flower and so continued until hard frosts in November cut them off. Never did we have stokesia flower so freely, but I admit it would have been ruinous to have left them on this ground for the winter. The same year good strong plants from 3-inch pots were planted in light but well enriched sandy soil, and they were pale and poor in comparison to the seedlings planted on the damp spot. Its native home appears to be in wet pine bogs. The flowers are a beautiful light lavender blue and three to four inches across, sometimes showing a faint tinge of red. If proper precautions are taken to insure it from standing under water during the winter months, it is one of the most satisfactory perennials grown. It is propagated by both seed and division."

NEW EARLY CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

If there were a mid-October exhibition this year twelve fine new varieties, at least, could be entered from abroad. A few of the sorts described below will not be of use to the commercial grower on account of color only, but where variety is wanted, these sorts would make a fine collection, while the white, yellow and pink sorts will prove valuable additions to our October 15 varieties; in fact they are startling novelties when the date is remembered, as they are up with the very finest of November sorts. France has given us the first seven.

Etienne Bonnefond is a big buff, incurved with broad petals, eight and one-half inches across; very fine.

Baron Chiseuil is one of the red and chamois-colored fellows used for "any other color" at the shows; very large and showy, especially at this date.

Mlle. Marthe Morel is like a morning cloud in color, like Vivand-Morel in form, a beauty, and a big one.

Mme. Paul Sahut, "the faultless," opens with golden center tinted pink, which rounds out into a ball of snow white, of soft finish and wonderful keeping qualities.

Neven Rene is a horizontal petaled magenta, with incurved touffles of silver, a nice color and pleasing variety in form.

Salome is a golden yellow with a fine wide spread; a dainty finish makes this a beauty.

Mlle. Touzet is one in which we think we have an October Chadwick.

All the above are free growers, without "necks," and handsomely foliaged.

In the English section, Carrie has come and gone, a fine September golden-yellow; a beauty. And now we have Miss Olive Miller, a lavender pink, probably the best of its color and date yet introduced; a nice, large, showy flower.

Mrs. A. McKinley is a buff and bronzy red, finely rounded in form and lighting up beautifully at night.

Goacher's Crimson is a red and gold that does not burn; a formal, dahlia-like flower that is very popular in England this season.

Ethel Fitzroy is an improved and early Kate Broomhead, a gorgeous and beautiful variety, very brilliant in coloring, which is bound to become popular.

The later set are expanding their buds in fine style and each day show up something new and wonderfully fine. Mrs. Longley is opening up a breadth of light, maroon velvet petal that is marvelous. S. T. Wright, Lord Hope town and Lord Alverston are running a race in scarlet and gold, and some of the new yellows look like the rising sun. Anything more delightful than the new mums cannot be found today in the whole world of horticulture.

ROSES.

Grafted Versus Own-Root.

During the past season several inquiries have reached me regarding the advantages to be derived from using grafted stock, and which was the most suitable stock to use for indoor culture. As the time is approaching when the stocks for grafting must be put through their preparatory course, a few remarks along these lines may prove seasonable.

The principal object attained by this method of propagation is to obtain a better root action for those varieties which are naturally weak on their own roots, or which show a tendency to become sluggish, or which prefer taking a rest at the season when their services are most in need.

In the Manetti, a rose of Italian origin, are combined the qualities of vigor and robustness, with fine, fibrous roots, which continue in activity during the entire season, a most essential requisite for the ever blooming varieties. Another very material qualification possessed by this stock is its immunity from the ravages of eel-worms. From inquiries I have made during the past few years I have not heard of one authentic case of eel-worms infesting plants on this stock. Where this pest is prevalent in the soil it would certainly appear from up-to-date evidence to be the safest course to graft all suitable varieties, such as Bride, Maid, Liberty and Beauty on this stock.

There are other stocks, such as Rosa canina, which also have their ardent advocates. Canina appears, from what I have seen of its conduct under glass and from opinions which I have gleaned from other growers, to have a tendency to rest during the winter months, and therefore is undesirable for this purpose.

By securing increased root action during the period from propagation time until October, we are able to produce a much larger and stronger plant, which will certainly give us a larger cut of blooms. Of their quality I will speak later on. If this root action can be sustained during the winter months the plants can assimilate a larger quantity of food and, logically, they should still be able to supply a larger cut. Where the soil is poor and requires an extra amount of feeding matter added, this is a distinct advantage, but where the soil is heavy and of a richer nature the advantages are not quite so apparent.

I have for years grown grafted stock of Bride and Bridesmaid alongside these varieties on their own roots, in both light and heavy soils, and kept a faithful record of the doings of each from October 1 till May 30. These records show that grafted stock on poor soil was more productive and the blooms of better quality than were those on their own roots in the same class of soil, though in both respects they fell behind those same varieties on their own roots, which were planted in the richer soil.

The grafted stock planted in strong, fibrous loam certainly made astonishing growth, being nearly twice the size of those on their own roots. The first cut was of about the same quantity, but the quality of the bud was inferior; during the winter months the quality improved, particularly in length and wiriness of steam, but frequently, much more frequently than with those on their own roots, the buds were off color.

In summing up, at the end of each season, we came to the conclusion that taking the extra trouble and expense involved by this mode of propagation into consideration, and the difference in quantity and quality being so imperceptible, especially when grown in heavy soil, there was little profit in it and I have practically given up using grafted stock for our own planting.

Different conditions of soil, climate and water have a great effect in modifying our ideas, however well fixed we may deem them to be, and I confess that experience along this one line has radically altered mine. RIBES.

COVERING ROSES.

Can I cover young tea roses this fall, for winter protection, with half-rotted horse manure and keep through winter, or would leaves be as good? I had about 200 young roses and 150 hybrids covered last year with wheat straw and we had so much wet, snowy weather that the straw packed badly and froze about the roots, causing the loss of many plants. It is hard to get well rotted cow manure, though if it is thought best will try to procure it. J. S.

The most successful method of protecting outdoor roses during the winter is to cover each bush with straw in the form of a sheaf, so that it will shed the water. This should be two and one half inches thick around the branches and tied loosely, allowing the lower ends of the straw to spread eight inches over the ground around the neck of each plant. Then cover the ground to the depth of three or four inches with half-rotted stable manure. Cow manure is too cold and solid for this purpose. This strawing and mulching should be deferred till after the ground is frozen hard, so there will be less danger of heating, which would be apt to restart root action, causing the sap to flow, making the wood too soft to endure the winter changes. RIBES.

VINES FOR WINTER BLOOMING.

A correspondent asks what vines are used in northern conservatories for winter blooming. By using the term "conservatory" it is likely that he is making this inquiry as to what would be useful in a private greenhouse. As to flowering vines that would be any profit in a commercial house, it can be dismissed by saying that in the present state of commercial floriculture there are none. Better and more profitable flowers can be grown on the benches or beds, and vines overhead, of inferior value, would impair their growth, with very little compensation.

If we must stick to vines that are grown only for cut flowers in a conservatory, the list is very limited. If for ornament, where graceful, pretty foliage is desired, the list could be very much extended. And there is no mistake about it that a private conservatory, however brilliant and gaudy with flowering plants, would soon get tiresome without the relief of climbing plants on the walls and rafters, or wherever they would look natural. A fan or balloon-shaped frame covered with some climbing plant and stuck in the middle of a bench, however much it showed off the gardener's skill, would not be natural or very long pleasing to the eye, while a vine running up a pillar or drooping from a rafter would have a natural, pleasing and lasting effect.

Allamanda Schottii is a true climber, with large, rich yellow flowers. Stephanotis floribunda has most fragrant, waxy white flowers. This was in great favor forty years ago for bridal bouquets when they were made of the shape and smoothness of a very large mushroom. Both of the above are splendid climbers, but are tropical. Bougainvillea Sanderiana is supposed to be more dwarf than B. glabra, but it gets there just the same. Long sprays of this are most decorative. Clerodendron Balfouri has very attractive flowers and is a fine vine.

For a lower winter temperature, say 55 degrees at night, you might grow several of the Noisette roses. Gloire d' Dijon, Marechal Niel, Solfaterre and Nephotos can be used, trained up a wall or pillar, and there are others. Heliotrope planted out at the end of a house where it will get light and plenty of root room, and cut back to the main stems every summer, is a cut and come again flower the entire season. Jasminum grandiflorum, trained up a pillar or lattice, is a sweet, dainty flower, often asked for and seldom to be had. Swainsona galegifolia alba, another plant for a pillar, is a pretty and useful flower. We used to grow and think very essential some scarlet tropæolum trained up a rafter.

And last, let me say that one of the most beautiful plants, not truly a climber, but one that can be trained up the light end of a house, is Acacia pubescens, which does well in a very cool house in winter. Sprays of this most delicate yellow flower, with its foliage, are at home in the choicest of decorations. A plant some twelve or fourteen feet high of this lovely acacia recalls memories of marbles, bird nesting, stealing peaches, flying kites, and several other virtuous early traits. The fact is that since our bouquets and baskets have ceased to be collections of twenty-five different species of flowers, many pretty things, of themselves beautiful, as all flowers are, have commercially gone out of date.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

DAHLIAS FOR EASTER.

In sending an exhibit of dahlias to the October meeting of the Pittsburg Gardeners' and Florists' Club, L. K. Peacock forwarded a letter which was read when the blooms were under examination. It was, in part, as follows:

We do not try to grow those immense cabbage-head varieties and we do not try to grow large flowers primarily. First, we want bright colors; secondly, good form; then they must have lasting qualities, so as to keep well after being cut; and last, but not least, they must have long, yet strong stems. Every flower should be supported on its own stem, and should make a fine appearance in that form. A flower that will not hold up its head on its own stem is, from my standpoint, not suitable or worthy of general cultivation.

Now that the dahlia seems destined to fulfill the prophecy we made seven years ago at the first dahlia exhibition in St. George's hall, Philadelphia, namely, that the dahlia would be the paramount flower during September and October, we believe that every florist should take advantage of the great demand and handle dahlias, and that every grower should grow only the best and exhibit them in an easy, graceful, natural form.

I remember very well when we first brought out Dahlia Nymphaea. It was surprising the difficulty we had in getting the florists to take hold of it, but as soon as the people once saw the flower its success was assured. But while the public was getting interested in dahlias they did not stop with dahlias during fall but demanded them during the winter, and for several years past we have grown dahlias under glass for a few particular customers, until now the demand for dahlias at Easter has become so large that we are advocating every florist to plant dahlias as a crop to follow chrysanthemums.

It all depends on the variety and the date of Easter when they should be planted. With those conditions in view I should say that they should be planted anywhere from December 15 to January 20. Varieties like Storm King can be planted from January 5 to 20 and give an Easter crop that is early or late. A. D. Livoni, pink, should be planted about ten days earlier, while Twentieth Century should be planted about two weeks earlier.

We have been growing dahlias under glass more or less for the past thirteen years, and we have never failed to produce much finer flowers during the spring of the year under glass than it was possible to raise out of doors in the open ground. When we grew our first dahlias under glass we had only the older varieties. Among them were Penelope and Crimson Ball. These flowered in 6-inch pots were superb. I never in my life saw roses in pots in the spring so beautiful. The flowers were half again as large as those grown outdoors. Coloring was much brighter in every respect in the case of Crimson Ball, while in Penelope the lavender shade was much softer.

Last winter William Falconer had very little faith in dahlias under glass; in fact, he so expressed himself to one of our representatives; but, however, he determined to give them a trial, and I will herewith ask Mr. Falconer to give you the rest.

"Being continually on the lookout for novelties for our Easter exhibitions at Phipps Conservatories," said Mr. Falconer, "I got on to the dahlias, but I had very little faith in them. We got a considerable number of Storm King white, and A. D. Livoni, pink, potted them in ordinary rose soil and started them in 55 to 60 degrees temperature, afterwards humoring them as their strength and stockiness would indicate. By Easter both varieties were in beautiful bloom; in fact, they were strikingly attractive, more especially the pink one. We had the plants in good bloom for about a month. We were short on Japan dwarf cherries last Easter, as our order from Japan never arrived, so the dahlias took their place. Besides, our people never before saw dahlias in profusion of bloom at Easter. They were a great success."

TWO GOOD DAHLIAS.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs of blooms grown by E. S. Thompson, South Haven, Mich., and show two of the most useful sorts in the cactus and decorative classes.

The cactus dahlia, John H. Roach, is a fine light yellow, of perfect form: the incurved petals are long and pointed; it is a beautiful flower and always full to the center.

Among decorative dahlias, Grand Duke Alexis has long maintained a leading place. It is of largest size and distinct form, as the petals are rolled up so that the edges overlap each other. The color is pure white, but there is a distinct tinge of delicate pink.

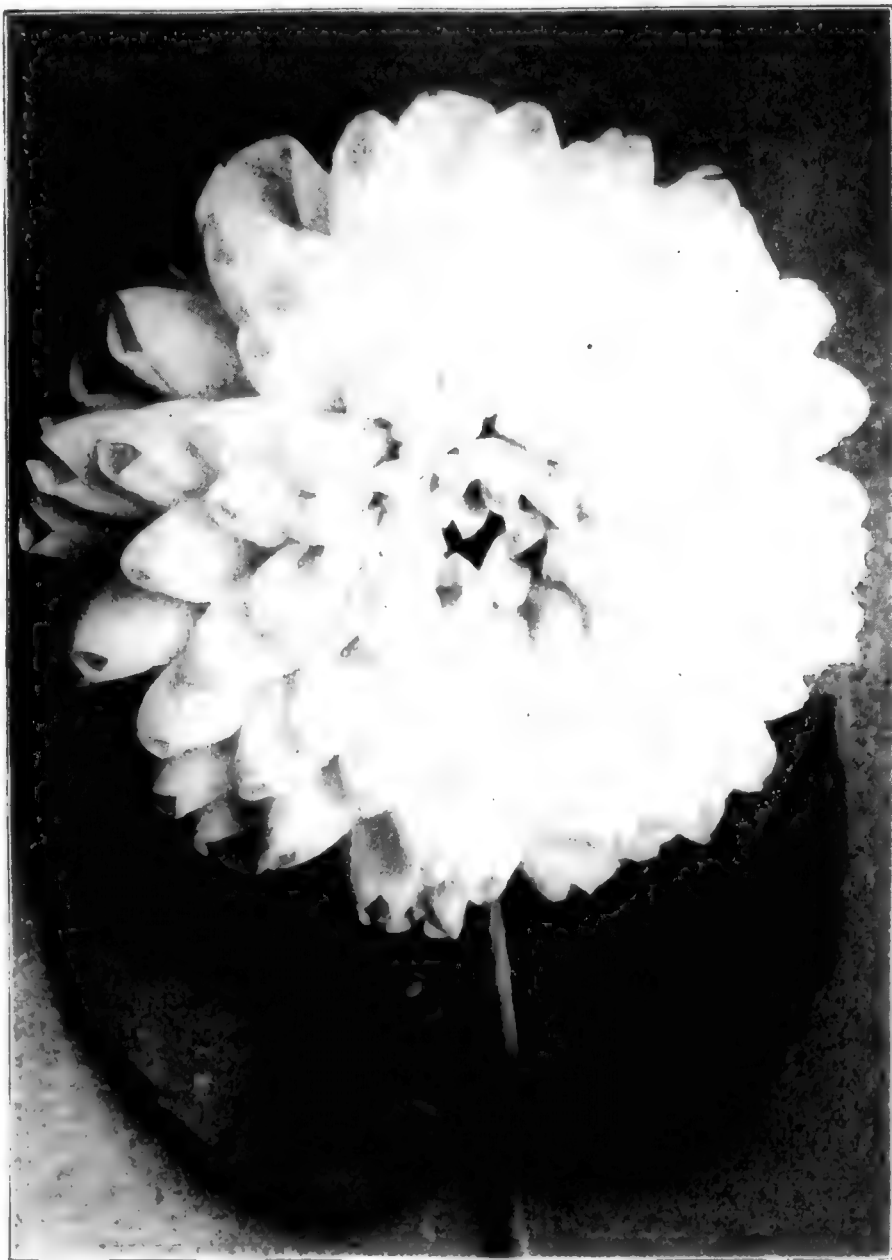

OLD TIMES AT HARTFORD.

The following is a portion of an address by C. S. Mason, of Farmington, Conn., at a recent meeting of the Hartford Florists' Club.

My coming to Hartford dates back to about the year 1850. At that time there were only two commercial greenhouses in Hartford. One, the City Gardens, so called, was situated on the Wethersfield lane, now avenue, about where Mrs. Colt's house now stands. The establishment consisted of one greenhouse about 18x60 and was run by Ransom Whitmore and William Doogue in company. The other was situated on Asylum avenue and was run by George Aflick. Mr. Whitmore and Mr. Aflick have long since gone to their long rest. Mr. Doogue, after leaving the City Gardens hired out as gardener to some one in Middletown, from there he went to Boston to take care of the Common and other public grounds and I believe he is still doing good work as superintendent of a part of the city's property. At that time there were only two private places that had a greenhouse, and they were both situated on Farmington avenue. One owned by George Beach, the other by Henry Beach. At George Beach's the gardener was James Boyce. Henry Beach's place fell into the hands of F. B. Cooley and I think the present superintendent of Cedar Hill Cemetery, Robert Scrivener, graduated from the Cooley place.

The variety of stock grown for bedding out, planting out, I should rather say, for massing any one variety of plants in beds was not practiced in Hartford at that time, was very limited: Verbenas, petunias, Phlox Drummondii, ten-week stocks, some bulbs, mostly hyacinths, feverfew and some others, such as heliotrope, etc. Verbenas took the lead. The varieties of roses grown for sale were few in number; you could almost count them on your fingers. For hardy roses there were Queen of the Prairies, Baltimore Belle, Crimson Bausault, Pink Bausault, Princess Adelaide, moss, centifolia, Baron Brevost and one or two H. P.'s. For tender roses there were Cloth of Gold, Lamarque, Louis Phillip, Hermosa, Agrippina, Safrano, etc. At the George Beach place at that time there used to grow a very strong plant of Cloth of Gold rose. It covered nearly the inside of a thirty-foot house and produced some magnificent blooms.

The coming of Col. Samuel Colt to ● Pure White Decorative Dahlia Grand Duke Alexis.

Hartford and his extensive purchase of property gave a strong impetus to all matters pertaining to horticulture. Particularly were we interested in building, heating and stocking greenhouses. Among other houses he built one for stove plants, others for greenhouse and temperate plants, one for forcing pineapples, another for strawberries, and so on. Among other things, he enclosed a space with glass with a high board fence, in which were planted peach, cherry, plum, apricot and other fruit, after the manner of Rivers, the great English orchardist. I have seen some splendid fruit in this enclosure. The strawberries grown in the house were well worth going a distance to see. And as to the pineapples, a seven pound Queen was no unusual thing. One thing that interested me more than anything else in the Colt establishment was a very beautiful Bank-sia rose. It was grown in a cold house carried up the rafters and was pruned back much as you would a Black Ham-burgh grape vine. To see that in full bloom in the spring was something to be remembered. The strange part of it to me was that it should flower so freely with such severe pruning. The spurs and even the old wood was covered with its beautiful clusters of clear white flowers. I think the constant pruning given it to keep it within bounds must have caused it to change its nature and adapt itself to existing conditions, so to speak, and so flower anyway, as we all know that climbing roses rebel against severe pruning.

The first gardener at Colt's was brought from England and he brought English ideas, methods and material. The heating apparatus was brought from England and consisted of a Weeks' upright tubular boiler for hot water, which heated the whole range of houses, and kept in good working order for several years. He had a pit in which to plunge the tropical plants, using spent tanbark as a material for plunging the pots in. Of course he had to have peat and silver sand for his azaleas, heaths and other peat-loving subjects. Gardener No. 1 was succeeded by James Stebbins, and he by Thos. Maltman.

About the time the Colt greenhouses were built, or rather a few years later, the Niles Brothers built places on Farmington avenue. John Niles built quite an extensive range of houses in connection with his place, and later Pliney Jewell had quite a nice house in connection with his place. They were both run pretty much after the same fashion, a few cut flowers for the house and material for planting out. At the John Niles place the most notable thing was a white camellia planted in the ground in one of the houses used as an entrance.

The camellia was a sight worth seeing, being covered with thousands of beautiful white blooms. Joe Moises was gardener at the Niles place and George Solly for Pliney Jewell.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Thrips.

Opinions differ as to the best method of destroying these pests, but in deciding the course to pursue there is more to be considered than the mere destruction of the insect. A certain remedy may put a stop to their ravages and at the same time be detrimental either to the plants or to partly developed blooms, which it would not be desirable to cut, and for this reason I do not advocate heavy fumigation with tobacco stems or dust for the destruction of insect pests of any kind. Regular light treatment as a preventive against aphides is the best use to which tobacco can be put in the greenhouse.

To kill thrips repeated heavy fumigation is necessary if tobacco is used. We know this is detrimental to blooms in any stage of development and I am satisfied harmful to the foliage, owing to the long time the fumes must be kept confined within the house. Red pepper properly handled will do the work economically and with dispatch, but there are many grades of so-called red pepper and, perhaps, little acquaintance with the manner it should be used to derive benefit, and so one hears of those who are not successful with its use. The brands sold in cans are as a rule best left alone, but that which comes in bulk and handled by a reliable dealer in drugs or the pulverized leaves and fruit of Capsicum annuum (Christmas pepper) will awaken Mr. Thrips to the fact that he is up against the real thing when the fumes reach him.

In using a remedy of this nature for the destruction of an insect so minute and so capable of retreating to a point of safety, it is imperative that the fumes reach them abruptly, in full strength. As an example, take a house 20x100 feet; use four stove lids or that a helper is needed to facilitate the work and all pet animals, if any, should be removed in advance. With tight ventilators and roof, pure pepper, very hot plates and lively work, one-half hour's fumigation should result in complete success.

Marketing the Product.

The grower who has been established some years, finds little difficulty in disposing of his output at remunerative figures, especially when he bears the reputation of producing first-class stock and handling it with a view to its reaching the retailer in fresh condition. For the benefit of beginners a few conclusions drawn from observation and experience may serve as a partial guide in forming plans for the coming season.

The contracting of one's whole supply at a uniform price for the season, either for each grade or as a lot, is apt to breed laxity on the part of the grower. The agreement on a sliding scale of prices is better, but has its drawbacks in that there is liability of new fields being entered at price soaring times.

The peddling around from store to store, day after day, of such perishable goods as flowers is a standing advertisement of cheapness, and places the grower at the mercy of the retailer. In large cities the wholesale market presents the ideal way in which flowers should be sold—on their merits and in accordance with the law of supply and demand. However, all growers have not the advantages of a flower market and must needs study well the demands and condition of trade in the most promising place in his vicinity, remembering there is always plenty of trash, but seldom enough really top-notch stock. Grow the latter and it will not long be a question of selling, but rather who will get it; then your reputation has begun.

ager for the company, who is well known for his success while foreman for Mrs. L. T. Grave, says that Richmond Gem is the purest, brilliant scarlet and much the most prolific scarlet he has ever known, in fact, a red Dorothy, but without the deep fringe which is a characteristic of that variety. It will be noted that they have a large stock of the variety, for it is 248 feet from where the camera stood to the far end of the house, but they are not ready to send out the cuttings this season. The blooms will be on exhibition at all the fall shows.

STEM-ROT ON CRANE.

Can anyone tell me what causes stem-rot in my carnations? I have eight varieties, about 1,000 plants in all, and all in the same soil and receiving identical treatment. They are all doing well except Crane. These began to show stem-rot about a week after benching and still keep it up. I have withheld water all I dare to, but do not know if I will save any of them.

T. G. Y.

Stem-rot is a subject upon which I have enlarged a number of times and so I must say practically the same things which I have said several times before. The correspondent seems to be well aware that it is a fungus and that excessive moisture will aggravate it. It is also a fact that some varieties seem to succumb to its attacks more readily than others, and during the last couple of years that grand old stand-by, G. H. Crane, seems to have been among its easiest prey. On some places it got so bad that the variety was discarded, although it could ill be spared from the list of standard cut bloom varieties. This is not a constitutional disease and it is not a sign of deterioration, which is proven by its fine behavior on many places last season and this. We have no healthier variety on our place today, and we have not lost two per cent of what we housed of this variety this summer. So I have put the stem-rot down as resulting from either improper handling or adverse conditions at some stage of the game, admitting, however, that the variety does take stem-rot more readily than most varieties when conditions are favorable to that disease.

Examine the plants and see if you did not set them deeper than they were planted in the field. This will often bring on stem-rot. If that is the case you should scrape off part of the soil. Sprinkle the surface of the soil with air-slaked lime and when you water, water only in the middle of the row, but give enough to soak down to the bottom. A very good plan is to take enough soil out of the middle of the row to make a trough about two inches deep and two inches wide. You can then fill this with water, when water is needed, and have the surface dry. We found this very effective a few years ago, with Jubilee. Keep the plants dusted with grape-dust or air-slaked lime. To the latter you might add about one-sixth its bulk of sulphur. Tobacco dust is also good to change off with. Don't withhold the water too much from the roots, but rather encourage a strong growth, always keeping the water away from the stem and the foliage. After the plants get to growing strongly again they are much better able to fight it off.

PLEA FOR FORCED DAFFODILS.

While admitting the beauty of forced hyacinths and polyanthus narcissus, I am convinced that the money lavished on these would be better spent on some of the standard varieties of those general favorites, the daffodils, says a writer in an English contemporary. They are quite as easy to grow, are considerably cheaper, at least, than named hyacinths, are far superior for cutting, and even for decoration more than hold their own. Of course, it may be argued that the range of color is rather limited. This, of course, is so, but the many beautiful and varied shades of yellow are admired by all, while glaring colors are favored only by the few.

As a rule, daffodils will not stand hard forcing. It is therefore advisable to pot up early, so that they may be brought along quietly, and yet be in their full beauty long before those in the beds and borders outside. Where large quantities are wanted for cutting, much space can be saved by planting the bulbs in boxes. Boxes about five inches deep are excellent for the purpose. Unless the potting loam is very poor no manure should be used, for the majority of the daffodils resent manure, especially in a fresh state. If it is absolutely necessary to enrich the soil, old mushroom-bed dung is the safest. If good turf is at hand, pull it to pieces with the hands, add about one-third its bulk of good leaf-mold, and enough sharp sand to keep porous. The only other ingredient needful is fine ground bone of good quality. The daffodil seems to greatly appreciate this latter, and it may be used quite freely if it is known to be pure. Do not pot in wet, sticky soil; rather wait till it dries a bit. Five, six, or seven-inch pots may be used. Drain carefully, and do not make the soil too firm, especially below the bulbs. The pots must be plunged outside for eight or nine weeks at least, then taken to a cold frame for a time, and then gradually admitted to the greenhouse. At first a temperature below 50 degrees is best for them, but after the flower-stems show, if wanted for any special purpose at any certain date, more heat may be given.

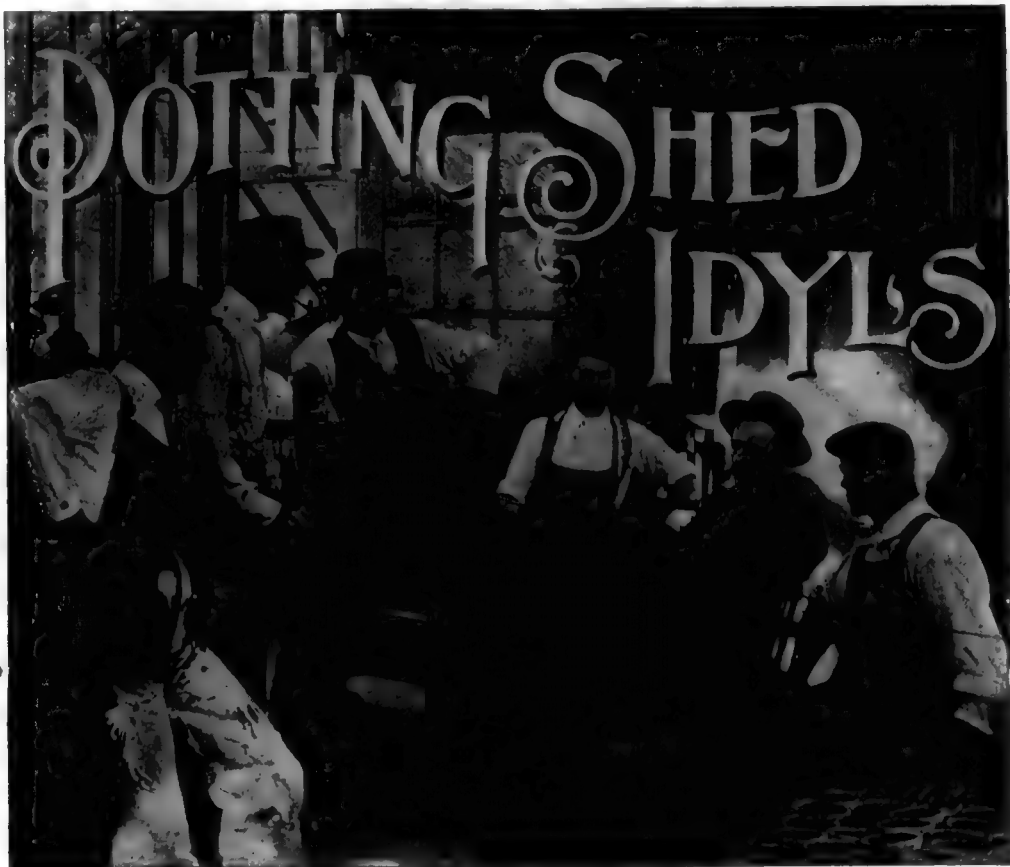

After the pots are well filled with roots weak manure water may with advantage be given them. Also, it will be found that Ichthemic guano, a dessert-spoonful to the gallon of water, applied occasionally, is a great help.

A word about suitable varieties, and I have done. The bicolors are always greatly admired, and probably Victoria forces as well or better than any other. Horsfieldi, Empress and Grandis, too, are indispensable. In the self class nothing could beat Emperor for pot culture. Henry Irving, Golden Spur and Maximus are also in the first class for our purpose. In other sections we have Sir Watkin, Stella superba, Barrii conspicuus, and Nelsoni major.

I mention none of the very new varieties, as it would be rather risky to try to force them. All I name are sure doers, are fairly cheap, and all very beautiful.

SOME SIMPLE SNAKE STORIES.

Tommy strolled around the end of the potting shed, dragging a long blacksnake, distinctly dead, which he heaved over the fence into a vacant lot. Jaggs, who was re-enforcing his suspenders with a twist of copper wire, looked up interrogatively.

"It was that fool cat," explained Tommy. "He's that proud o' catching snakes that he always takes 'em into the house to give the missus a treat. Seems like he mislaid that last one, and went off to look up his dinner somewheres else. The ladies wasn't pleased; I think one of 'em found the snake sittin' on the sewing machine."

"Beats all how scared women is of snakes," remarked Jaggs, cutting off another piece of wire. "Not as I'm partial to 'em myself, especially them nasty tree snakes. I pretty near run right over one once when I was shinning up a tree to get away from an ostrich. I've had a few narrow squeaks in my time, but that was about the nearest."

"I suppose you was spendin' Saturday afternoon down at the zoo," observed the man from Duluth.

"'Tain't likely as you ever 'eard o' South Africa," continued Jaggs, with deep sarcasm. "If you 'ad gone down there to free them poor sufferin' Boers like you used to talk, you might have learned somethink about tree snakes, and ostriches, too, as you don't know now."

"Never mind him, old man," advised Tommy; "the only ostrich he ever see in his life was the sword swallower in a dime museum."

There was a temporary lull in the conversation when Pharaoh, the cat, was seen to climb the fence, triumphantly bringing with him the defunct snake. He dragged his prey past Tommy with ostentatious defiance, and disappeared in the direction of the house, stopping occasionally to get a fresh grip on the slippery snake.

"I never thought, when I left South Africa, as a bloomin' old cuttlefish would save my life," continued Jaggs, shaking his head thoughtfully. "It shows as a cuttlefish 'as some intellect even if it ain't 'andsome."

"Think so?" queried Tommy, who was tenderly polishing his venerable meerschbaum with a ragged silk handkerchief.

"O' course," began Jaggs, "I 'adn't ought to ha' went to Sarawak. It was that time as I went collectin' for the Indian Rajah—him as was death on pitcher plants. I reckon I told you about his pet elephant as got an elegant case o' the jim-jams from drinkin' that there fly-poison in the nepenthes. Talk about temperance literature! A sight o' that there bloomin' old elephant makin' a disgraceful spectacle of himself was enough to sober a Bowery panhandler. And all along o' them innocent lookin' pitcher plants, as never ought to be let into a prohibition state."

"What's that you say, Jimmy? You never heard of pitcher plants as was intoxicatin'?" If you'll just stop and think how many things you haven't heard vet. Jimmy, you won't say nothink about pitcher plants. I s'pose you know them there inside kills bluebottle flies—ain't it reasonable that a nepenthes as the Rajah had to feed on chickens would intoxicate an elephant?

"There's one thing about Polynesia as I'd jolly well like in Jersey," continued Jaggs, who was mending his lingerie by the simple expedient of puckering the holes up into little knots, and then twisting a bit of wire around to hold the ragged edges together. "It's the only place I ever see where shirts grow on trees. All a chap has to do is hunt up a tree about his size, take out a buddin' knife and there you are."

"I suppose, when it's in full bloom, you wouldn't know one o' them trees from a Troy laundry," remarked Tommy frivolously.

"There you go, tryin' to mislead them as hasn't 'ad our advantages again," said Jaggs reproachfully. "There's too many chaps as comes back from their travels and tells a lot o' fairy tales—them bloomin' botanists is always doin' it. There was one of 'em as up and told me there wasn't no man-eatin' tree

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Thrips.

Opinions differ as to the best method of destroying these pests, but in determining the course to pursue there is more to be considered than the mere destruction of the insect. A certain remedy may put a stop to their ravages and at the same time be detrimental either to the plants or to partly developed blooms, which it would not be desirable to cut, and for this reason I do not advocate heavy fumigation with tobacco stems or dust for the destruction of insect pests of any kind. Regular light treatment, as a preventive against aphides is the best use to which tobacco can be put in the greenhouse.

To kill thrips repeated heavy fumigation is necessary if tobacco is used. We know this is detrimental to blooms at any stage of development and I am satisfied harmful to the foliage, owing to the long time the fumes must be kept confined within the house. Red pepper properly handled will do the work economically and with dispatch, but there are many grades of so-called red pepper and, perhaps, little acquaintance with the manner it should be used to derive benefit, and so one hears of those who are not successful with its use. The brands sold in cans are as a rule best left alone, but that which comes in bulk and handled by a reliable dealer or druggist of the pulverized leaves and fruit of Capsicum annuum (Christmas pepper) will awaken Mr. Thrips to the fact that he is up against the real thing when the fumes reach him.

In using a remedy of this nature for the destruction of an insect so minute and so capable of retreating to a point of safety, it is imperative that the fumes reach them abruptly, in full strength. As an example, take a house 30x100 feet, use four stove lids or that a helper is needed to facilitate the work and all pet animals, if any, should be removed in advance. With tight ventilators and roof, pure pepper, very hot plates and lively work, one-half hour's fumigation should result in complete success.

Marketing the Product.

The grower who has been established some years, finds little difficulty in disposing of his output at remunerative figures, especially when he bears the reputation of producing first-class stock and handling it with a view to its reaching the retailer in fresh condition. For the benefit of beginners a few conclusions drawn from observation and experience may serve as a partial guide in forming plans for the coming season.

The contracting of one's whole supply at a uniform price for the season, either for each grade or as a lot, is apt to breed laxity on the part of the grower. The agreement on a sliding scale of prices is better, but has its drawbacks in that there is liability of new fields being entered at price soaring times.

The peddling around from store to store, day after day, of such perishable goods as flowers is a standing advertisement of cheapness, and places the grower at the mercy of the retailer. In large cities the wholesale market presents the ideal way in which flowers should be sold—on their merits and in accordance with the law of supply and demand. However, all growers have not the advantages of a flower market and must needs study well the demands and condition of trade in the most promising place in his vicinity, remembering there is always plenty of trash, but seldom enough really top-notch stock. in New Guinea—a fat lot he knew about it. As for them Polynesian shirts, they was made o' bark, soft as a kid glove—you just slips off a section o' the right size, like a boy shucking a willow twig to make a whistle, lace it up with a bit o' raffia, and you've got a full dress costoom. There was one chap I know in the Solomon Islands—a beachcomber from Massachusetts with one eye, named Hopkins, as wouldn't wear one o' them shirts till he'd sewed sleeves in it, but the chief that bossed those diggin's had Hopkins slugged one night—said he wasn't goin' to have no one corruptin' his people with the vices o' civilization."

"I thought what you was startin' out to tell us was about the grateful cuttlefish as saved your life," observed the fireman, with an uninterested yawn.

Jaggs whistled softly for a few minutes, until the parrot was discovered in the act of dropping bits of broken flower pots upon him, from the rafters above, apparently with the idea of preventing an encore.

"Not as you're any judge o' music, you bilious old pirate," remarked Jaggs, glaring at the parrot, while he tried to remove a bit of flower pot that had slipped inside his collar. "I believe as even a cuttlefish would be gratefuller than a parrot, though that one wasn't. It ain't nothink much to talk about, anyway. You know there's heaps o' water snakes in the East Indies; the gaudiest mess o' snakes you ever see—purple, red and yellow, with tufts on their heads like cockatoos. Talk about bein' poisonous—why, a rattlesnake is just Mrs. Winslow's soothin' syrup compared with 'em. 'Tain't just in the rivers as you find 'em; they're sea-goin' reptiles, and there ain't no fun in runnin' into a school o' them venomous beasts, when you're out on a quiet fishin' trip. Well, I was out with a bunch o' Malays, as was gettin' sea cucumbers—what they calls trepang, as they dries for them messy Chinamen. It was a hot day, and I may have been dosin' a bit, when one o' the Malays give a yell, and there we was runnin' right into an acre o' them circus-poster serpents. At the same moment, the boat (it was one o' them outrigger catamarans) begins to rock tremendous, and I see more snakes, as I think, comin' aboard. I see right away, though, as they wasn't snakes—we'd stirred up a bloomin' big cuttlefish, with arms all of 20 feet long, and there we was, with that there J. P. Morgan octopus on one side, and a big mess o' poisonous snakes on the other, and nothink to fight with but the paddles!

"I reckon, as I wasn't takin' no chances with poisonous snakes, anyway, and I made a clip at one pea-green serpent as was makin' straight for me. I wasn't quite quick enough, and I feel its fangs go into my arm, just as the cuttlefish gets one o' them slimy arms twisted right around me. Say, maybe you think I wasn't in a tight place! Sea just a-boilin' with poisonous serpents on one hand, cuttlefish the size of a haystack on t'other, doin' his little best to snake me out into the briny, the old catamaran doin' a regular loop-the-loop, and me knowin' as inside o' ten minutes I'd be deader'n Pharaoh and covered with bright purple spots from that there snake bite! It was a bit different from that time as I rode seven miles through the Himalayas on the back of a snow leopard, that confidin' beast thinkin' as he was goin' to have me for tea, but it wasn't no pie, I can tell you. Seems if I was a bit dazed—sort o' dotty for a few minutes—then I comes to myself, lyin' in the bottom o' the boat. The Malays was throwin' dead snakes overboard—more'n a bushel of 'em, and there was the devilfish, rockin' on top o' the waves, swollen the size o' two haystacks and covered with big purple blotches!"

Jaggs yawned ostentatiously, and strolled over to read the thermometer, remarking casually that it was about time to turn in.

"But what happened to the cuttlefish?" demanded an insistent chorus.

"Why, that really was what you might call a sing'lar thing," responded Jaggs. "You see, that there cuttlefish got 'old o' me—not as he 'ad any special use for me, but just through general cussedness. Once get them there tentacles touchin' anythink and they 'old on. When that poor misguided old lobster got fastened on to my arm, o' course he drew all the poison out o' the snake bite, and reg'larly committed suicide!

SPANISH IRIS AND GLADIOLUS.

What is the best way to force Spanish iris and The Bride gladiolus so as to get them in bloom for Easter? The Holland catalogues claim that they can be forced quite easily. Let me know if it can be done successfully.

CORNWALL.

Forcing Spanish iris is something new with many of us, but I am trying a few thousand. We must be guided somewhat by the way they grow and flower out of doors. They are perfectly hardy and when planted in beds out of doors for spring flowering they don't flower with us till the middle of June, which proves they could be forced as we do early tulips.

Easter is as early as you can expect to get them. As soon as received in the fall plant in flats of 3 or 4 inches of soil and treat as you would your tulips or narcissus, covering with a few inches of earth and later a little litter or leaves to keep out hard freezing. They should not have higher than a carnation house temperature when brought in to force and allow eight weeks from time of bringing into heat till flowering. Keep constantly moist; never let them be dry or they will come blind. I won't be positive, yet I believe it would be quite difficult to get them in flower before early April.

Gladiolus Colvillei, The Bride is quite different thing. They want no outside treatment, as we do with all the so-called Dutch bulbs, but can be put into soil on the benches where they are expected to flower. Like freesia, they can be grown among carnations or on edges of beds. Yet this is not the way to grow either freesia or gladiolus well and they will repay for a bench of 4 inches of soil in a perfectly light position. There are few more delicately beautiful flowers than this miniature gladiolus, and yet it's not by any means common.

Plant the gladiolus in small lots every two weeks so that you will have a succession. About 55 degrees at night will suit it, but after you see the spike formed it would bear more heat if convenient.

It is described as a variegated sport of the darkest Begonia semperflorens Zulu King, that was introduced in the autumn of 1897. The plants of this novelty, as grown under glass, are of a stout and regular bushy habit, and branch freely. The leaves are very small, round, upright, and bright sulphur-yellow colored, marked sometimes with spots or blotches of an orange color. The veins of the leaves are sometimes of the same yellow color, but at other times of a lively green. The flowers are rich crimson, and the seed-pods crimson-red. When this begonia is planted out the yellow color becomes bright carmine or carmine-rose on the margin of the leaves. Mr. Roemer states: "All the other yellow-leaved varieties of B. semperflorens, such as B. semperflorens atropurpurea foliis aureis, and also of Begonia semperflorens Golden Ball, are less attractive than Golden King."

Mr. Roemer also has a variegated helianthus, of which he states: "Most of the plants of Harpalium rigidum foliis aureis, or Helianthus rigidus foliis aureis, are about five feet in height. They are vigorous in habit and branch freely. The rough leaves are bright sulphur-yellow colored, sometimes variegated with green. The flowers are of good size and of a darker color than the leaves. I dare say there are few perennials that have such bright foliage, and I am sure it will be found valuable for planting in groups or in beds; but single plants will also be very effective. The plants are perfectly hardy and have withstood several winters with me in the open ground without any protection or covering. Last year about fifty per cent of the seedlings came true from seed."

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There is a considerable variation in the reports as to market conditions this week, some of the houses which usually are best fixed for orders reporting demand not to their liking. City trade continues below normal for the season and shipping orders seem to have fallen off somewhat since the chrysanthemums came in, indicating that many buyers have local supplies of these flowers and are using them in place of the roses and carnations for which they must draw on the wholesale markets. E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott's, also notes that practically every order calls for the best grade only, as though there are plenty of lower qualities throughout the territory served by this market, for certainly the call for funeral and other made up pieces has not stopped everywhere at once.

Beauties are the one item short of the demand. Cuts have shortened with most growers and it is not possible to fill all orders. Bride and Bridesmaid are equal to all requirements, both as to quality and quantity. Red roses are not so plentiful, but seem little called for just now. Chatenay is one of the popular items, but the supply is largely increased this season and the quality is good, so there is no difficulty in filling orders.

There is unrest among the carnation growers because returns are not up to the averages of the past two seasons. But it must be remembered that unusual conditions for those two seasons put average prices considerably above any previous record and that this year we are back to normal, with larger supplies than ever. Any grower who has record of the average price of his carnations prior to the two unusual years will find that by comparison he is doing pretty well now.

Chrysanthemums, too, are a few points off from last year's prices, and that before the cuts have reached full tide. When the flood is on it is likely to take a pretty good flower to find what the producer will call a satisfactory sale. It is a little too early to say much about violets. They need a little brisk weather to give them quality. Outdoor flowers are still plentiful, but selling slowly. Green goods are in fair demand. The weather is fine and warm.

Saturday's Exhibition.

The program committee of the Florists' Club met last Friday afternoon at the office of the chairman, C. M. Dickinson, and completed arrangements for the club's first monthly show, to be held next Saturday, October 24, opening at 4 o'clock in the well adapted hall on the third floor at Handel Hall, 40 Randolph street. The Foley Manufacturing Co. has provided premiums for the most meritorious exhibits, both chrysanthemums and carnations, in addition to the certificates which will be awarded under the rules. The judges are J. S. Wilson, Ernst Weinhoeber and E. A. Kanst. A good display is assured and a good attendance, just how good, of course, cannot be foretold, but upon it will depend the club's next move. If sufficient support is forthcoming a much larger show will be given in November, to which the public will be invited. Everyone in the trade should be on hand Saturday afternoon and evening. At the close of the exhibition adjournment will be taken to a 50-cent dinner, where speech making will be in order.

Willis N. Rudd, President-Elect of the Chicago Florists' Club.

The Florists' Club met last evening with an attendance which taxed the capacity of the hall and the new era was inaugurated with a vim which speaks for the most useful season in the history of the organization. Much important business was transacted and the following officers elected: President, Willis N. Rudd; vice-president, P. J. Foley; secretary, Geo. W. Wienhoeber; treasurer, Edgar Sanders; financial secretary, Alex. Henderson; trustees, Geo. Woodward, Leonard Kill, John Reardon, E. F. Bentley and Robert Johnston.

Various Notes.

The Pacific Express Company, which operates on the Vanderbilt lines, has been tied up this week by a strike of messengers. A few southwestern shipments were delayed, but nothing serious.

Several of the big growers have lately given their men either a small raise in wages or reduced the number of hours which constitute a day's work.

There seems to be no scarcity of help; Bassett & Washburn advertised in a daily paper last week and received nearly 100 applications from firemen.

The E. Wienhoeber Co. has mailed to customers a very handsome "engagement" book, the work of George W. Wienhoeber.

E. H. Hunt has bought out J. A. Lynn, of Charlevoix, Mich., and is now the only manufacturer of the popular birch bark ware. The new insecticide, Tobak-ine, is having a great sale.

N. J. Wieter is feeling pretty well these days, thank you; his little boy is recovering from a somewhat alarming illness and they have a nice cut of Beauties just when they need them.

Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., is sending E. C. Amling blooms of Robert Halliday chrysanthemum that are a credit to the grower and the reputation of that sterling variety.

E. F. Winterson and his force of assistants are working nights right along getting out orders for supplies.

Robert Lockyear, of Frank Garland's, is on the sick list again this week.

W. N. Rudd entertained a party of ten congenial craftsmen at dinner at Ladd's, on Root street, last Saturday night.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting very good lilies from cold storage bulbs of Lilium longiflorum giganteum. They have wholly given up the use of Bermuda-grown bulbs.

Michael Rocklin, of Hunt's, and his brother Morris are to marry two sisters, the Misses Adelson, on January 23.

Ed. Eisner, of C. A. Samuelson's staff, is the proud father of a heavy weight baby girl, and all doing well.

Will Kyle, of Kennicott's, is doing a term of two weeks' jury service.

The daily papers have taken up the matter of the failure to hold a flower show this fall; the Chronicle says it is due to "intestinal strife" in the Horticultural Society. The shows of the Florists' Club come in for commendation.

Bouquet green is arriving and is of very good quality. The price is about $5 in single crate lots.

Visitors: H. A. Catlin, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.; J. A. Lynn, Charlevoix, Mich.; Geo. Souster, Elgin, Ill.

PACIFIC COAST.

Geo. F. Struck, representing Lager & Hurrell, the orchid importers of Summit, N. J., has been making a tour of the Pacific coast.

A PLACARD on the walls of a western floral store reads: "A deposit on all orders required, both to encourage honesty and to relieve the mental strain."

The Leedham Bulb Co., Santa Cruz, Cal., has a seedling decorative dahlia with a flower so high built and the lower petals so secured as to be almost spherical. It is crimson in color and has been named Crimson Ball.

CARNATIONS.

Thomas Thompson, Santa Cruz, Cal., does a general retail business but makes carnations a leading feature, and his flowers compare favorably with those of the best eastern growers.

The cultural methods vary but little from those followed in the east. He replants his houses in July and August with plants that have grown in the field from about April 1. The field growth is probably less rapid in the spring months than in the east, owing to the cool nights that prevail on the Pacific coast. And on account of these same cool (frequently really cold) nights not many flowers are produced out of doors. He begins propagating the young stock about the middle of October.

The plants on the benches look exceedingly well, being uniformly clean and vigorous and showing a fine crop of buds. No heat has yet been given, but firing will begin probably the latter part of this month. Heavy firing is not necessary at any time, and none at all on bright days. Each house has liberal side as well as top ventilation and the side ventilators are used every bright winter day. This season he will use anthracite coal for heating and it costs $13 a ton.

Mr. Thompson retails all his carnation flowers and the price of first class blooms has been 50 cents a dozen the year around. He says, though, that the price of all supplies, fuel, etc., has so increased that the price of flowers will have to be boosted and he will soon elevate his price for carnation flowers to 75 cents a dozen.

Lawson is his banner pink variety. Since the advent of Lawson he has discarded Crocker, finding that he can cut three blooms of Lawson to one of Crocker the season through. But he finds Crocker a good one to sell to customers as a garden plant. Marquis is also in this class and is now grown only to supply wood for propagating plants for sale to those who wish carnations in the garden.

So far his leading white variety has been Los Angeles, which originated with the Redondo Floral Co. It is a good sized flower and very freely fringed. It has been very productive and a steady bloomer with him. He has heard that the flowers do not ship as well as some other whites, but as he does not ship any this lack has not troubled him. He has now on trial Gov. Wolcott, Lillian Pond and Murphy's White. So far Wolcott and Murphy's White have made the best showing.

He thinks well of Estelle as a scarlet, and has a few plants of Adonis on trial. He grows Roosevelt for crimson and the good old Eldorado for yellow. He has a full bench of Enchantress and is much pleased with this new variety. He finds that his customers will willingly pay fifty per cent more for blooms of this variety than the others.

During the past summer Mr. Thompson added some new glass by extending one of his 18-foot carnation houses fifty feet.

PLANT NOTES.

Regarding Shade Trees.

In most of the larger towns on the Pacific coast societies are being formed with the purpose of beautifying their respective districts. Many of our cities have gone beyond the limits of fourth class villages, and although California is yet in her infancy we have enough people who have a taste for beautifying the city drives and sidewalks to get together and organize improvement clubs. Although palms and acacias are considered among our most valuable shade trees there seems to be a disposition among most planters to use deciduous trees.

First in order is the silver maple, which makes a very handsome tree and does not grow so fast but that with judicious pruning it can be kept within bounds. This tree is alternated very often with the American linden, also a vigorous grower, and a very effective sidewalk tree. The common cork bark elm was very largely planted until about two years ago, but it is not in such favor as it was formerly on account of its habit of suckering. It plays havoc with well kept lawns and has the faculty of breaking cement sidewalks anywhere in its immediate vicinity. Carolina poplars have been discarded for the same reason, and also the white flowering locust. The eastern white elm has been planted quite extensively in many localities, and as it is of slower and more compact growth than the cork bark it is generally considered a more beautiful tree.

In evergreen trees the Acacia melonxylon and Acacia mollissima are the most desirable. The former is the more rapid grower and stands pruning better than the latter variety. The Acacia mollissima has beautiful fern-like foliage and bears immense trusses of sweet scented yellow blooms in the early spring time. None of the other acacias, except Acacia linearis and Acacia lopantha, are used to any extent for sidewalk purposes on this coast.

Palms make a very satisfactory tree, and where there is room enough Phoenix canariensis, Washingtonia robusta and Brahea edulis are extremely ornamental. Where there is less room Chamærops excelsa and Dracæna indivisa will be found very useful. The umbrella tree is very widely planted in the central and southern portions of California, but it does not thrive well when located near the ocean.

Grevillea robusta is a grand sidewalk tree, but is not well known as yet. When well started it makes a very effective growth in a short time and will become a valuable adjunct to our list of sidewalk trees. G.

LAHARPE, KAN.—C. F. Adams is building a greenhouse.

MADISON, WIS.—George Rentschler is building a substantial residence near Calvary Cemetery.

NEW YORK.

Plan for Fall Show.

Leonard Barron, of American Gardening, 136 Liberty street, New York, is press agent for the great chrysanthemum show, November 10 and following days, and requests that all intending to exhibit there will kindly forward promptly descriptions of new plants and flowers, with photos and particulars as to the same. The exhibition promises to be a great success. It appeals to growers as no other show has done in that it provides for both large and small contributors. Its offering of prizes is characterized by the most gratifying liberality. The co-operation of sister societies is a foundation of strength, of wonderful inspiration to President Herrington and his associate officers of the Chrysanthemum Society. And artistic and financial success is beyond any question. The exhibition hall is the finest for the purpose on the continent, and its 7,000 square feet of space will be none too great for the crowds which are anticipated.

Retail Trade Improves.

Retail windows are beginning to put on their fall finery, with an abundance of orchids, chrysanthemums and violets, and with charming effects produced by autumn foliage in combination with these. The retailers seem to have an abundance of funeral work, many are still busy with the October weddings, and all are growing optimistic as to the coming season. When the smoke of the elections has cleared and Elijah has returned to Zion, steadier conditions will prevail and all will settle down to the inevitable hustle that never ends till Easter.

Various Notes.

A goodly quantity of the forty millions of violets that are predicted have already arrived and never were they such a drug so early in the year. There are literally millions of them in sight and the supply promises to be the greatest ever known.

Jas. O'Shea, New York representative of E. J. Taylor, is the happy father of a future florist.

Julius Roehrs, of Carlton Hill, N. J., will have an auction sale of palms, etc., next week at his conservatories, that promises to be a counterpart of the successful venture of Messrs. Craig and Harris, of Philadelphia.

A son of Herman Kretchmar, of the well-known firm of Kretchmar Bros., formerly of Flatbush and later of Nyack-on-the-Hudson, is now a resident of Chicago, in the employ of Peter Reinberg. He was for a short time with A. H. Langjahr, the wholesale florist, of New York and Brooklyn.

Yesterday William Elliott & Sons sold at auction some fine palm stock, rhododendrons and other plants from the Biltmore estate at Asheville. Those who enjoyed the outing at the S. A. F. convention last year did not forget the excellent quality of the exhibit at that time and the attendance and prices realized were quite up to expectations.

Autumn flower shows will soon be in full blast around New York. At Dobbs Ferry, November 6 to 7; at Madison, November 5 to 6; at Tarrytown, November 4 to 6; at New Haven, November 10 to 12, the same dates, unfortunately, as the Chrysanthemum Society and American Institute exhibition in this city.

Fred Breitmeyer, of Mt. Clemens, will be in the city this week and will bring some sample blooms of his wonderful new rose, which is still unnamed, and for the best name for which $100 in gold is offered by his firm. Fred will undoubtedly have the $100 with him, and a warm welcome awaits him and his pink charmer.

In common with other supply men, Reed & Keller report one of the best seasons on record. Christmas is still some distance away, but in two weeks they sold over 10,000 of their folding bell. This is one of their most successful novelties; it can be carried in the pocket and is not injured by usage. Another good novelty is the chime of bells and another is the plushine bell of which they are the originators.

Albert W. Wadley and Miss Mary Gorton, of Newport, were married October 12. They will reside at New Rochelle. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Chrysanthemums rule now; everywhere these gorgeous colors add brilliancy to the shops. Colonel Appleton, yellow, and H. Balsley, pink, and Childs are recent acquisitions. The list of fancies is small compared with the ordinary sorts; varieties that brought good prices when they first came into flower, are now offered at very low figures and are hard to sell at that. Prices are unsteady now; the best bring top figures, but they are few when compared with the army of medium grade flowers. Cosmos is tremendously plentiful all at once and "no good," commercially speaking. Dahlias are also plentiful. They still sell, but prices are steadily receding. Carnations are improving and increasing in numbers; the best are coming from a distance. Lillian Pond, Floriana, Enchantress, Mrs. Lawson and other fancy sorts are offered in some quantity. White is still better stock than colored sorts in ordinary grades. Violets are pretty nice now. Valley is fine. Among roses medium Beauties are more popular than extras. Queen of Edgely is coming in more freely. The teas are slowly recovering from the siege of bad weather. Maids especially suffered. It is a pretty clever grower whose stock of this rose is clean and well colored today. To sum up: It's a buyer's market now.

The Flower Market.

The first annual meeting of the Flower Market—His Grace of York informs me I am wrong in saying its the second—was held on Monday last at the Market. The reports of the officers and the auditor were read. They may be summed up in that of Secretary Lonsdale. It was given in one word "Progress." The election of directors resulted as follows: For the short term, Alfred Burton; for the long term, Charles E. Meehan, R. G. Palmer, J. W. Young. Two amendments to the by-laws were proposed: The first changing the fiscal year from October 1 to September 30, to July 1 to June 30, passed without opposition, President Heacock stating that it was simply intended to make the market year coincide with that of the growers. The second amendment removing the clause limiting the number of shares to be held by a stockholder, now placed at fifty, met with lively opposition. It was said that removing this check might easily result in the Market becoming a private concern and unsatisfactory to the growers who supported it. After spirited debate a vote was taken, resulting in 285 shares for the amendment and seventy shares against. Numerically the friends of the amendment were in the minority, but they were the big stockholders and they held proxies. It was then urged on good authority that the amendment was lost, the by-laws providing that any alteration required the vote of two-thirds of the stock. After a warm discussion the chair decided that the by-laws bearing on this point meant two-thirds of the stock present, and not two-thirds of the total number. The amendment was therefore declared carried. The auction sale of stalls, held just before the meeting produced a small premium, the growers feeling that it is stuff, not position, that counts.

At Dreer's.

The months of August and September have brought results in the great palm growing industry precisely similar to those achieved during the same months by the now famous Lou Dillon and the no less famous Major Delmar—old records broken, new records made. Yet so vast is the stock that the various sizes of each variety remain unbroken, and whether it is "sixes" or "sevens" that are ordered, matters not; they will be forthcoming and in perfect condition. One is told that there is nothing new about the palm business. Perhaps that is so, still there is always food for thought gathered in a stroll through these ranges of houses,—the thrift seen everywhere, the perfect system, the careful attention to every detail necessary to command success, always something new, worth learning if you want to learn. The novelties of interest are present as well as the standards. There is the beautiful green and gold Selaginella Watsoniana, very pleasing to the eye, evidently an acquisition. Then there is a new evergreen, a novelty indeed for this tropical place, of such promise that an exception had to be made in its favor. It is Retinospora Sanderii, said to make perfect specimens, two to two and a half feet high. Phoenix Roebelenii, a rival of Cocos Weddelliana in grace and probably its superior in durability, is on trial. These are both imported specimens and home grown seedlings.

A very bright red alternanthera, considered better than the so-called A. brilliantissima, grown successfully at Girard college and at Fairmount park, is on trial. It seems vigorous, as much brighter than brilliantissima as the latter is than A. amoena spectabilis or A. paronychioides major.

The "fernery asparagus" described before, a hybrid that would climb, has proved a good subject for propagation by cuttings, a most desirable attribute not shared by many of its family.

This week Pandanus Sanderi will be distributed, or at least the distribution will commence. The orders for the golden pandanus have far exceeded expectations. Growers, retailers, gardeners and amateurs have shown full appreciation of its good qualities by ordering freely.

Notes.

W. P. Peacock sent in 13,000 dahlias in one shipment on Monday last, to S. S. Pennock. Over 10,000 were disposed of before 3 o'clock that afternoon.

The Doylestown National Bank reopened its doors last week for business under the new management. It is pleasant to note that the amount deposited was larger than that withdrawn.

George Farrell started work on Tuesday with George M. Moss, wholesale florist, 32 South Seventeenth street.

Edward Reid's paper on the West, published last week, elicited much favorable comment.

C. A. Dunn & Co. are adding the next door basement to increase their facilities for handling stock.

H. Bingham Myers celebrated the first anniversary of his assuming control of the Colonial Flower Shop. Mr. Myers is pushing the Colonial with a will and should make it a success.

M. J. Brinton, of Christiana, Pa., is sending in a nice assortment of carnations to W. J. Baker.

Edward Reid received about 6,000 nice carnations one morning lately. This flower, for which he has a reputation, is gradually rounding into shape. His Maids are of good quality, with fine foliage. Kaiserins here are also excellent. Mr. Reid believes in "turning on the light" when showing his stock.

The October meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held on Tuesday evening. Perennials, hardy chrysanthemums and cosmos were called for on the schedule.

Eugene Bernheimer reports receiving nice flowers of Enchantress and Mrs. Lawson carnations; also Col. Appleton and G. W. Childs chrysanthemums. The Floral Exchange is shipping him nice flowers of Queen of Edgely.

Charles Fox, Broad and Master streets, had a very large wedding decoration last week.

George Faulkner is doing a nice business at his Fifteenth street store.

It is curious how three truthful writers can describe the same thing differently. Take the case of early chrysanthemums. Three local writers agreed as to the grower who produced the first flowers, and the commission merchant who received them. They probably would have agreed as to the retailer who bought them, the swell who ordered them and the pretty girl who received them, had they gone so far; but on the question of variety there was a startling difference. One said it was Glory of Pacific, another Merry Monarch, while a third Montmort. Who was right? PHIL.

BOILER AND PIPING.

I am building a greenhouse 20x100 and would like some information as to how to pipe it and the adjoining houses. Two houses I want to run about 50 degrees at night and the other at 65 to 70 degrees. The coldest nights are about 20 to 25 degrees below zero. I have a high pressure boiler twelve feet long and forty-four inches wide, with forty-six flues. How many runs of pipe will heat the houses and what sizes are the best? How many flows and how many returns. At what part of the boiler should the returns enter? E. J.

It is not possible to give detailed information with the scant data furnished. If the houses have glass on the roof only one 2-inch overhead flow and ten 1-inch will answer for the cooler houses, and one 2½-inch or two 2-inch flows with twelve 1-inch returns for the warmer house. If there is glass on the sides of the houses more returns will be necessary and in the cooler houses the flow must be increased to 2½-inch. The main flow from the boiler should be not less than a 4½-inch one, and the main return, which must connect at the bottom of the boiler, or at least well below the water line, should be a 2½ inch.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade the past week was exceptionally good with some of the West End florists. Social affairs were quite numerous, while some pretty good-sized funeral orders were put up by the down town florists. The usual demand, though, that generally comes with the chrysanthemum season has not as yet materialized and the business is not what it should be at this time of the year. The mild weather is still with us and so far no frost of any consequence has appeared. The wholesale houses are still loaded down with stock of all kinds, and of good quality, with prices very reasonable. The wholesalers report that the fancy stock sells well, but there is too much of the second and third quality coming in, which has to be sold for almost nothing. Brides and Bridesmaids are most plentiful, but there are also plenty of Golden Gates. These are selling at from $2 to $6 per 100. Fancy Carnot are in demand, so are other roses of this class. Long Beauties are good sellers, but on other grades the market is well supplied. Fancy bring $3 per dozen, and $2 and $1 for the others; shorts 60 and 75 cents per dozen.

Among the chrysanthemums Glory of Pacific, Bergmann and Yellow Queen are best; really fancy blooms are as yet limited. Prices run from $1 to $2.50 per dozen. It is said that by the end of this week better conditions are expected in the 'mum market. In carnations indoor-grown stock is improving in quality, but nothing very fancy is seen as yet. There is plenty of second quality at $1 and $1.50 per 100. A good deal of outdoor stock is still coming in and with these the market is pretty well supplied with carnations of all kinds.

Violets are becoming somewhat better in color and a few cool days will see first-class violets in the market again; 25 and 35 cents is the price this week. Cosmos is very plentiful and makes good window decorations, being very cheap; 25 cents per 100 buys the best. A big lot of valley was used last week for weddings and was a little scarce. A good deal of wild smilax is in and the past week quite a big lot was used for decorations.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club had a very large attendance at its regular meeting last Thursday afternoon in Odd Fellows hall. The meeting opened at 2:30 with all the new officers present except Vice-President Winter. The trustees reported that the list of essays would be ready by the next meeting. Several important communications were read and filed. Four applications for membership were read from S. Silverstone, Vincent Gorley, Max Rotter and Walter Hummel. The first three are retailers and the latter a student at Shaw's Garden. Wm. Bonche was elected to membership.

J. H. Hadkinson, of the landscape department at the World's Fair, was present and gave a very interesting talk and invited all the members to visit the grounds. Mr. McClure and Mr. Bal-this invited the members to visit Shaw's Garden on November 15 and view the new chrysanthemums, which will then be at their best. Both invitations were accepted with thanks. A committee consisting of Messrs. Fillmore, Koenig and Tesson was appointed by the president to make a collection to help H. Schweitzer, of Mendota, Ill., who recently lost everything by storm. All present contributed and any others can send to any of the committee.

The president handed in a list of the committees which will have charge of the next convention of the Society of American Florists. The chairmen of the different committees are as follows: General reception committee, J. F. Ammann; president's reception, J. J. Beneke; ladies' reception, Fred C. Weber; souvenir publication, R. F. Tesson; press committee, A. S. Halstedt; advertising and printing, F. J. Meinhardt; hotels, E. C. Burchel; finance, Otto G. Koenig; entertainment and sports, Carl Beyer; decorations, Henry C. Ostertag; superintendent of trades display, C. A. Kuehn. The list of the different committees was approved by the club. All chairmen should be present at the next meeting. The finance committee was instructed to begin work at once. Mr. Koenig, the chairman, promised that by the next meeting a report would be made.

The following members have promised essays during the winter: F. J. Fillmore, J. W. Dunford, J. H. Hadkinson, Mr. McClure, A. G. Grinner, Geo. Windler. Messrs. Ammann, Dunford and Halstedt, the trustees, will have the full list ready by the next meeting, when a chrysanthemum exhibition will be given at the club rooms. Three prizes will be offered for the best ten blooms, $5, $3 and $2 open to local growers only.

The question box brought out several lively discussions, especially the one condemning the crape pullers and the club will ask the daily papers to help break up this practice. The meeting then adjourned to partake of an elegant lunch spread in the next room.

The next meeting will be held on Thursday afternoon, November 12, at 2 o'clock.

Various Notes.

J. H. Vesey spent Saturday with the trade on his way home from Fort Wayne, Ind., where he was on a visit to his brother, Judge Vesey.

J. A. McDowell, the orchid, bulb and cactus grower from the City of Mexico, is here making arrangements for space at the World's Fair. Mr. McDowell will also make a display at the next S. A. F. convention, having already spoken for space.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, A. S. Halstedt and A. G. Fehr, of Belleville, the Ude brothers, Pilcher and Berdan, of Kirkwood, A. J. Jablonsky, of Wellston, Messrs. Dunford, Steidle and Tesson, of Clayton, spent a very pleasant afternoon at the club meeting last week.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was in town Saturday buying supplies. Mr. Guy reports trade good, with plenty of funeral work.

Fred C. Weber furnished the decorations for the paint, oil and drug convention at the Southern hotel. A big lot of orchids was used for the occasion.

George Waldbart is making a fine show of cut flowers, also some well grown pot chrysanthemums. Business at his place has opened up nicely.

Ostertag Bros. furnished one of the largest wedding decorations of the season last week. That's the reason Henry missed the club meeting.

Freddie Weber has returned from his trip east, which he reports very pleasant, meeting with many friends in New York and Philadelphia.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers is again about her place of business after a long illness. She reports trade in decorative work good.

J. F. Windt has some very fine Boston ferns, also extra good pot chrysanthemums. Mr. Windt has been very busy of late.

Bowling.

The Ladies' Bowling Club will go in a body this week Wednesday, to Belleville, Ill., to be entertained by the ladies of that place in a bowling contest. At the last week's bowling Mrs. F. M. Ellis made the highest single game yet made, which was 145. All the ladies are improving and are even thinking of challenging the men for a match in the near future.

Nine of the bowlers were at the alleys on Monday night and rolled their usual three club games, with some very good scores, as follows:

Player.	1st.	2d.	3d.	Av.

COVERING PIPES.

What is the best material with which to cover steam mains, overhead in a greenhouse, where not all the heat is wanted, but some would be desirable? Most of the pipe is 2-inch and expense is something of an object. F. W.

Hair felt is the cheapest material to use for such purpose, the thickness depending upon the amount of heat it is desired to have escape into the house. One-quarter or one-half inch would be ample. Another handy way is to use the sectional asbestos covering and cover only portions of the pipe, varying the amount of covering as circumstances call for. The asbestos air cell covering made by F. J. Gast, of New York City, is very economical and convenient to use.

COLUMBUS, O.—The Fifth Avenue Floral Company is building an even-span house 25x100 and the Livingston Seed Company three houses 16x100 for plant trade. Ralph Knight, foreman at Livingston's, has resigned to take the management of the establishment of the Smith Floral Company. The weather has been unfavorable for outdoor flowers and good stock in all lines is scarce.

MADISON, N. J.

A Wonderful Region.

It would take a week of steady visitation and sunshine to do justice to that modern rose-garden of Eden, Madison and vicinity. A day and a half, therefore, of the wettest of wet weather enabled me to only touch the hem of its garment and left for a more convenient season the completion of a delightful visit. Having seen this gem of God's country only at the yearly Florists' and Gardeners' Club banquets, and after the evening shades had fallen, I was not prepared for the magnificent view that spread before me in every direction from twenty to thirty miles.

With the Rose Growers.

Rose growing establishments seem to emerge from every side, and to tell the story of one of these rose factories is to give an epitome of all, for wherever we go Brides and Maids reign triumphant, and with few exceptions these are the staple varieties, and form the bulk of the shipments that make their influence felt so forcibly every morning in the busy wholesale marts of New York city.

Some of the establishments visited are models of neatness, thrift and enterprise; all of them should be. Many of the growers are "old timers" who have grown gray in the business, and whose reminiscences are decidedly interesting.

C. H. Totty has the nucleus of a splendid range, with an abundance of land, and every promise of permanency and progress. His stock of roses and carnations are as good as the best, some exceptionally grand Lawsons especially giving evidence of expert culture. A delightful home and family add to his facilities for extracting a goodly share of life's sunshine and his venture into the responsibilities of independence is already a pronounced success.

Near him is the plant of that veteran wholesaler, James Hart, of West Thirtieth street, a name synonymous with the wholesale cut flower trade when most of his present associates were in the nursery business, and when it took grit and money combined to establish a trade and hold it through the vicissitudes of that adventurous era. Mr. Hart was struggling with a mildew visitation when I called and was by no means alone in his sulphurous atmosphere, the long damp spell having brought the same affliction to nearly every grower whose establishment was visited. Pleasant calls were made upon Schultz Bros., James Dunlavey, Wm. Mulholland, M. B. McGuire, Michael Noonan, William Charlton, Richter & Barton, E. J. Fenton, Edward McGinnis, Michael Brady and Benj. Gary. Our old friend Wm. Plumb also had a warm welcome, as usual, and surprised us with the finished condition of his range of glass, every house being in ship-shape order. There are dozens remaining whose establishments I hope to visit shortly.

Good New Chrysanthemums.

Few men are better known to American floriculture than Arthur Herrington, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, and William Duckham, manager of the beautiful James estate, and a prominent member of the Madison society and the New York Florists' Club. The exhibits made by these gentlemen at the fall shows in and around New York for years have made them famous.

Some grand new chrysanthemums were especially interesting at Mr. Duckham's and the exhibition in New York in November will receive some of the grandest blooms ever placed before the public. A superb white, Miss Florence Molyneux, a mauve pink, nearly twelve inches in diameter; William Duckham, a splendid keeper, yellow; Mrs. E. Thirkell, General Hutton, yellow, and Harrison Dick, an orange, were especially admired.

In the conservatories about every variety of palm and fern is in evidence and all are in as perfect condition as it is possible for them to be. Orchids, roses and carnations and, in fact, everything that is of value in floriculture is here, as far as the space at his disposal will permit. The same perfection prevails in the lawn decoration and the evergreen garden, and the hand of a master artist can be seen on every side.

The Market.

The demand for stock has greatly increased in the last week; general conditions are much improved and everyone seems to be doing his share. Prices are being gradually boosted and were it not for the large quantity of stock that is coming in there would be a decided rise. Chrysanthemums are coming in large numbers and the price is a trifle lower than last week, but this is only for the poorer grades. Pink 'mums do not seem to sell as well as they might. White takes the lead, as usual, but there is a brisk demand for yellow and not enough good stock to take care of it. Many growers make the mistake of cutting their blooms before they are much more than half open, so as to get them to market a few days sooner. The blooms, being but half matured, will not hold up outside of an ice box. Thus the retail buyer who expects a chrysanthemum to last four to six days at least, finds that they wilt down over night and it is next to impossible to revive them. It will be money in the grower's pocket if he will leave his blooms to mature perfectly.

Short-stemmed roses are still a trifle over plentiful, but the increased demand has helped move large quantities of them that have been finding their way into the barrel. Longer stemmed ones are selling out clean and at fairly good prices. Beauties are scarce and so are Meteors and Liberties, but there is an abundance of all other kinds. Carnations are coming in much heavier, but still there are scarcely enough. All varieties have been showing a decided tendency to go to sleep very quickly. It is hard to account for this, but it makes handling them very unsatisfactory.

Violets are arriving in much larger quantities and there are takers for all of them. The quality is very good. The price still remains about 50 cents. Cosmos is still in large supply, as we have had no frost as yet. A few callas and Harrisii are arriving. Valley is selling well. Greens are plentiful.

Various Notes.

The B. K. & B. Floral Co., of Richmond, Ind., is sending in a good many blooms of their new red carnation, Richmond Gem. This variety is improving very rapidly and the flowers now measure two to two and one-half inches. It has a beautiful color and strong perfume, also good length of stem and judging from the quantity being cut from small space, it is very prolific. It is hardly a fancy variety, but looks to be a money maker, and that is what the average grower is looking for.

The Queen City Flower Co. has discontinued business and the Rosebank Co. will occupy its store in the near future. Miss Edith Kyrk, who was manager for the Queen City Flower Co., has opened a store in Avondale.

The retail stores along Fourth street are filling their show windows with chrysanthemums and the display is very beautiful. This will undoubtedly do more to boom the sale of this flower than any other method of advertising.

L. A. Jennings, of New Castle, Ind., and Mr. Lodder, of Hamilton, Ohio, were callers. C. J. OHMER.

THE INDIANAPOLIS SHOW.

With fourteen successful shows in the past, Indianapolis is to have another exhibition November 10 to 14, upon a larger basis. The premium list this year is heavier and more complete than for any other show in the United States for 1903. Extensive preparations are under way to decorate Tomlinson hall with thousands of electric lights and yards of laurel. Tomlinson hall has been remodeled and will lend itself as never before for decorating.

A great many of the growers of the middle west have already signified their intention of exhibiting, and the request is made by the manager of the exhibition that the entries be made early, so that room may be provided for all. The show has been extensively advertised throughout Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, which will guarantee all exhibitors a large advertisement on their exhibits.

Two able and well known judges, Emil Buettner of Chicago, and Theo. Bock, of Hamilton, O., have been selected. On Thursday evening, November 12, the State Florists' Association will entertain all visitors to the show, and a merry time is anticipated in this respect.

Among the more prominent exhibitors at the show will be John N. May, Summit, N. J.; E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.; W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind.; Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich.; F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind.; Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, and others, besides Baur & Smith, Henry Riemann, Bertermann Bros., J. Heidenreich, F. Huckriede & Son and many others from Indianapolis.

RENT FOR PALMS.

One question I have never seen answered in the REVIEW is as to the proper price to ask for the use of palms from month to month, the proposition being that a large hotel wants a lot of plants and wants them changed each month, the old ones taken away and fresh ones brought. The house is heated by steam but the plants would have to stand bad treatment at times. Phoenix, latanias and arecas are wanted. What would be a fair price say for plants ranging all the way from 3-inch to 12-inch pots?

SOUTHERNER.

BAY CITY, MICH.—Shepherd & Son have about completed the season's addition to their already large greenhouse plant on Columbus avenue.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

State Florists Meet.

At the monthly meeting of the State Society of Indiana Florists there was a good attendance and plenty of interest. F. Sidney Smith, who had just returned from Texas, brought some cotton weavils, which are playing havoc with the cotton down there this year. He gave quite a talk on the difference between a life down there and the life one lives up here. If it isn't a drought down there, it is a flood or a hailstorm, or some insect pest like the one which is ruining the cotton. He reports that the state of Texas is offering $50,000 to the man who invents something that will effectually destroy the weevil.

Show Preparation.

I. Bertermann reports preparations for the fall show progressing favorably; more premiums than ever before and more interest among the people. Low rates are offered by the railways throughout the state. There is a liberal premium offered for a new rose not yet in commerce, nor even named, and we hope to see an interesting competition for this prize. Another feature of this show will be the inspection committee. Each exhibitor, after setting up his exhibit, reports to this committee, which will inspect his exhibit to see that it conforms with the requirements of the class it is entered in. This relieves the judge of much labor in counting, etc., besides removing from his shoulders the responsibility of ruling out an exhibit that does not conform with the requirements. It has often happened that a visitor broke a bloom in a vase of several and when the judge found the vase one short he was obliged to rule it out. This will not happen now, as the committee will know that the required number were put into the vase by the exhibitor and the judge will pass judgement on what remains. The committee consists of H. W. Riemann, H. Junge, E. A. Nelson and A. F. J. Baur. There will be a banquet given by the society to its members, and all those of the craft from out of the state, so don't forget to make arrangements before you leave home to stay over Thursday night.

Notes.

This city is again threatened by the fakir pest, but all the down-town storemen have risen in arms against them and they will be driven out and kept out if such a thing is possible. None of the local growers will sell to them, but they ship in their stock from Chicago and other large flower centers. The local election has just taken place and when the new mayor takes his seat the florists will renew their efforts against the fakir.

All kinds of stock is improving. Carnations are getting better right along and steady firing is telling on the roses. 'Mums are coming in in better quantity and quality, and some good blooms are now to be had. Trade is picking up nicely and all good stock is used up right along. A. B.

We are in receipt of the fourteenth annual report of the Missouri Botanical Garden, a handsome volume of which 206 pages, accompanied by twenty plates, are devoted to a "Synopsis of the Genus Lonicera," by Alfred Rehder.

A PLAN and planting list for a new park at San Diego, Cal., has been prepared by Samuel Parsons, Jr., New York. It calls for large quantities of native stock.

JOHN F. GUENTHER, of Rochester, died October 12, aged 76 years. He came from Germany while yet a young man and started in the nursery business. His son, F. Guenther, is now in the nursery and florist business at Brighton, N. Y.

WITHIN the city of New York there are over eighty distinct parks, ranging in size from one acre to over 1,700 acres, the largest being Pelham Bay park, near City Island, with 1,756 acres; followed by Van Courtlandt park, with 1,132 acres; Central park, 843 acres; Bronx park, 660 acres, and Prospect park, Brooklyn, 516 acres, and so on to the smaller breathing spots of the metropolis, making a total altogether of nearly 7,000 acres.

PREPARING FOR PLANTING.

J. A. Pettigrew says that the preparation of the ground for the planting of trees or shrubbery is as much a matter for consideration as the question of when to plant or what to plant. Due importance is frequently not given to this fact. Trees and shrubs often are crowded into holes that are not large enough to permit even their roots being extended. Such planting generally is accompanied by a lack of subsequent cultivation; and the result is failure.

For single specimen trees, or for widely spaced trees, holes for planting should be prepared of not less than fifteen feet square, and three and a half feet deep. If the subsoil is good a simple loosening up, with an admixture of stable manure or peat, will be sufficient; if of sand or sterile gravel, and the best results are desired, it would be better to excavate the whole and substitute loam.

A proper preparation of the ground when intended for mass planting entails plowing and subsoil plowing, continued in cross directions until the ground is thoroughly broken up and reduced to a mellow condition. Should humus, or organic matter, be deficient in the soil, this should be corrected by a dressing of stable manure, peat, or other organic matter. This treatment will insure a condition of the soil which will make it hold moisture and assimilate fertilizers. In dry, sandy, or gravelly soils too much importance cannot be given to the value of surface mulching, or constant cultivation, after planting.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE Mann Seed Co. has been incorporated at Portland, Ore.

THE Ford Seed Co., of Ravenna, Ohio, has filed an involuntary petition in bankruptcy.

CALIFORNIA crops are being shipped, and the invoices show a full delivery in most cases.

THE many changes in postoffice addresses occasioned by rural free delivery require that mail lists be corrected with great care to avoid duplication.

THE government has taken voluminous testimony in the matter of the claim of the New York Market Gardeners' Association. A decision is expected shortly.

AS PREDICTED in this column at the time, the September frost in the Rocky Ford, Colo., district, while it cut off the melon crop, increased seed production to a considerable extent.

THE small onion set growers have come to terms with the buyers, and the scattered lots which they have held and which have had a depressing effect on the market are now out of the way.

SEED CROP SUMMARY.

Onion Sets.

White sets are spoiling considerably owing to a dry rot that seems to get worse the longer they are stored. This is likely to cause high prices for whites when spring demand starts in. Yellows and reds are keeping better, but the quantity of them in storage is not up to the average of ordinary years. Good prices will rule before planting begins.

Beans.

The threshing of the garden varieties is on at most of the growing stations. Valentines are the sort that promise to be the shortest. Michigan will produce about the average quantity from a given area this year, but in New York and other eastern sections a considerable fall down is indicated. The color of the eastern product will be poor.

Peas.

In most cases the deliveries from the growers have been made and the situation appears to be about what has been expected. The hand picking is well under way and the percentages that are to be delivered on contract orders should be known shortly.

Cucumber.

There is still much speculation as to what the final outcome will be. It is generally conceded that the crop will be far short of what it should be, and that last year's values for the seed will hold good this year.

Sweet Corn.

Notwithstanding the very favorable fall weather, the growers fear that most of the late varieties will fail to mature fully, and that much of the product will be spoiled in the curing. Present indications point to a scarcity of all the standard late sorts. High prices are being asked for all the late varieties, and many of the large growers are at sea as to the proper values to put upon the early sorts. It is a case of wait for developments, and a question as to who will come out best, the one who waits, or the one who purchases now.

SOME EUROPEAN NOVELTIES.

Quite a number of noteworthy novelties are offered by European growers for the season of 1904. M. Herb, of Naples, Italy, offers a new coleus of a dwarf and very compact growth, with long, narrow and gracefully overhanging leaves. The colors of the irregularly curved and undulated, willow-like leaves are so lively and their shade so manifold, that this decorative plant rivals many flowering plants. It is well adapted for planting in beds. He also offers two dwarf varieties of helianthus, single-flowered varieties of very compact growth. Maurandia atrocerulea grandiflora is another of his novelties which will be very interesting to all florists who grow pot plants for spring sales. This new maurandia is described as possessing giant flowers of a beautiful dark blue. The plant grows very willingly and vigorously and produces as large a number of blooms as the old, small-flowered species. This plant is a splendid, fine-leaved climber. M. Herb also offers a very large-flowered, yellow datura under the botanical name of Datura fastuosa colossea aurea plenissima. This variety has large flowers, golden yellow and very sweet scented. The flowers are double and are composed of three tube-like crowns, which are plicated like filtering papers. This will make a fine plant for the lawn. Zinnia elegans fl. pl. crispa is another type of zinnia and is offered in pure white, carmine, light scarlet, cream and saffron. Celosia monstrosa aurea is a new, very tall-growing, yellow-flowering coxcomb. Aster Peony Perfection, with quilled center, is certainly a striking novelty and is said to remain double not only during the hot weather, but even when they begin to fade.

Messrs. Haage & Schmidt, of Erfurt, Germany, are also out with several very attractive floral novelties. Ageratum mexicanum Little Blue Star is described as making very tiny, bushy plants not exceeding four to five inches in height. Aquilegia ecalcarata is a new perennial from the Japanese island, Yezo, and has proved to be perfectly hardy in our climate. A new Aster sinensis, Fairy, is a type of ray aster. Begonia Schmidtii rosea, a new pink, is highly recommended, having a much prettier effect than the white-flowering type of this plant. Lobelia Cavanillesii lutea is a very attractive greenhouse plant, blooming the first year from seed. Phlox Drummondii ana compacta Apricot is a new dwarf, of very uniform growth and height, said

NEW ORLEANS.

Horticultural Society Notes.

At the meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, held October 15 at 110 St. Charles street, the members entered into a very extensive discussion upon this season's crop of chrysanthemums, and it was the unanimous opinion that the flowers this season would fall decidedly below the accustomed supply. The meeting was presided over by Vice-President Eichling, and Secretary D. Newsham was also present. After transacting the regular routine business of the society, the discussion was opened, and almost everyone present expressed his opinion and told his experience. They found that there would be a fair growth of the white flowers, but the yellow flower, which is by far the most popular, would be far below the standard. This is due to the fact that there was a great deal of rain in the summer and a long spell of dry weather following, which checked the development of the blooms. The market, therefore, will be somewhat short on these popular flowers this winter.

The Market.

The crop of flowers held out remarkably well during the past wet spell. The supply became very thin in spots part of the time. The procession of retail buyers was also very slim, while the unfavorable weather lasted. White carnations were the scarcest item, but supplies were increased again by last Saturday. Roses, usually the most limited of flower crops, seemed to hold up the best of any, except it might be chrysanthemums, which, you know, as a general thing refuse to be affected by such small things as changes in the weather conditions. There are lots of the early varieties now on and selling very reasonably, also a few of the large later kinds; $2.50 per dozen is the best price. The red rose situation is peculiar. The local supply is very low indeed, and only just enough demand to balance it, while there is every indication of a huge surplus in a very few weeks, especially of American Beauties. While there has as yet been no general freeze, and the tenderest plants are green in many localities, the nature of the growth of outdoor plants this season so unfitted them for cold nights that all outdoor flowers are about gone, asters entirely so.

Notes.

New faces and familiar ones not seen since last spring are gradually appearing, both among sellers and buyers. Vacationists are about all returned and there is a general air of expectation of business. A few salesmen from out-of-the-state concerns are skirmishing around.

Outside of a big lot of severe colds I think the general health of the florists is very good, but rose-grower Dana was a bit under training a few weeks. Foreman J. J. McManus was off a few weeks, doing escort duty to a case of honorable inflammatory rheumatism in one knee, and Sam Wax is not up to his usual condition.

J. S. MANter.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The last few weeks have been rather quiet in all lines except funeral work, which seems fairly good for this time of year. Cut flowers are very plentiful; in fact overcrowding the market. Chrysanthemums are coming in very good and seem to be the mainstay of the market. Roses are not as good as last year, and the demand for them is limited. Carnations are good, some of the best coming from Farmington, Conn. Violets are improving in size and color this cloudy weather, but the demand is irregular. Jack Frost has not visited us yet and so there are plenty of dahlias and cosmos. Good cool weather and sunshine is needed to make the flower market move and with it better quality of goods.

No change for the better is yet noticed in the wholesale market. The supply is abundant and increasing. Saturday, with its constant downpour, forced prices to the bottom and the frosty, seasonable weather at the beginning of the week seems to have had little beneficial influence. It is generally conceded that no permanent improvement is to be expected for a couple of weeks yet.

Two years ago we wrote you to discontinue the REVIEW until such time as McKinley's prosperity should strike the south, and as it has reached our corner now, we hasten to renew our subscription to your valued paper.—A. A.
PANTET & Co., Fort Smith, Ark.

I HAVE sold out of carnation plants.
The REVIEW is a wonder-worker. It reaches everybody and it induces them to buy. It has brought me orders from the Atlantic seaboard and all through the western states, and everyone says, "Saw it in the REVIEW," as if that in itself were a guarantee.—ALFRED B. EVERETT, Chicago.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The early part of the week favored us with very fine weather followed on Saturday by a cold wave, but no frost as yet, so the cut of dahlias and cosmos, with a few late gladioli, is still sufficient for all purposes. Roses and carnations can be had in quantities to fill all orders and white and light pink chrysanthemums are seen in all the store windows, also a few yellow. Prices are still at summer's low water-mark, and good mums can be had at from 6 to 15 cents each.

Notes.

Chas. Brown, of Canton, and W. F.
Kasting, of Buffalo, were here with the

Fred Witthuhn has been very busy the past week with funeral work and reports a very good business for the summer months. He is growing a bench of very fine Boston ferns and has reason to be proud of them.

Henry Piggott says that business at the new store is far beyond his expectations. He is sending some very nice mums and carnations to the F. R. Williams Co.

A new retail store will soon be opened on Broadway. E.

RANDOM NOTES.

TITUSVILLE, PA.—Thomas Murdoch reports a busy season. He makes a specialty of outdoor work and has a big patronage among the secret orders.
William Bay has a snug place and all the business he can take care of in design work. He has a good cut-flower and plant trade. L. J. Rowe is the latest addition to the trade, having embarked in the business here about two years ago and built up a complete range of glass.
Everything is up to date, stock in excellent shape, bright prospects for future business.

NEW CASTLE, PA.—Fischer & Sons removed their greenhouse plant during the summer and are busy getting in shape for fall business, quite a task for one year, but they did it well. Butz Bros. are busy getting in fall stock.
They are strong on Asparagus plumosus in 4-inch pots. This size is rather scarce in the market just now. J. J. Beck recently entered the ranks as a professional, having formerly raised a few flowers for pleasure, being one of the largest market gardeners in the county.
Carnations were first experimented with,
then roses. Both were very satisfactory.
This year about 25,000 feet of glass is being devoted to cut flowers. I noticed a pink pompon dahlia flowering in the house, quite a novelty. It will be kent through the winter and will doubtless be a profitable flower, grown in a cool house.
Lettuce is raised in large quantities, Big Boston being considered the best variety for summer use, Grand Rapids Forcing the best winter variety. Mr. Beck has a retail store in town, which gives an outlet for his varied lines.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.—Walker & Mc-Lean have made many changes in the Hippard place. I found John Walker busily engaged pipe fitting, finishing the heating of a large range just rebuilt.
One would scarcely recognize the former plant at Crab Creek. "It has kept us hustling all summer," remarked Mr.
Walker. McLean's health gave way and compelled him to seek the quiet rest obtained in the City of Brotherly Love.
From last reports he was much improved and expected to return within a few days with lots of new ideas and with rejuvenated strength. I noticed a bed of the pink dahlia seen at J. J. Beck's. It promises to be a popular flower. Experiments with solid beds look successful. Roses, carried over, cut back and tied down, are making strong breaks.
This method is far more successful than the old bush style. Carnations planted in May could not be better, speaking well for early planting. M.

THROUGH the adv. in the REVIEW we have sold all our field-grown carnation plants.—BACKER & Co., Billerica, Mass.

PLEASE discontinue my advertisement of field-grown carnations as I am getting more orders than I can fill.—
HENRY BAER, Peoria, Ill.

I THINK it only right and just to encourage you in your work of editing the best florists' paper in America, by saying that if I could only afford one paper it would be the REVIEW.—A. J. BOOTH-MAN, Adams, Mass.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

In a paper on the art of table decoration, Owen Thomas, head gardener to the late Queen Victoria, says: "Among bulbs at different seasons of the year are to be found many of the most effective and beautiful subjects for this work, commencing with the snowdrop, grown in shallow pans mossed over, transferred from these when in bloom, and placed on small gold or silver or glass plates, and disposed artistically on the table. The crocuses are treated in the same way, rendering an agreeable and pleasant service. The hyacinth also, both the ordinary kinds and the Roman, may be used in pots, and when well grown and flowered make an effective arrangement; but too many of these must not be placed on the table, or the perfume in many cases will be objected to. Tulips in pots, especially the Darwin self-colored ones, the old English types including the Parrot, are par excellence the most effective subjects to use for this work. Indeed, some of the most effective tables I have ever had the pleasure of ornamenting have been decorated by tulips, especially the self-colored ones."

IT IS NOT only by hindering the loss of nitrogen that catch crops are useful, but they also increase the amount of humus in the soil. The function performed by humus was long misunderstood, but it is now known to be the soil's storehouse of nitrogen, and although not directly available to crops, it is rendered so by nitrification. Farmyard manure introduces into the soil these nitrifying organisms in large quantities, a quality not possessed by chemical fertilizers; a point of great importance, but which is sometimes overlooked.

NEW LILY OF THE VALLEY.—A Holland grower has a new form of lily of the valley which has been named Convallaria majalis prolificans. Where under ordinary circumstances there is a solitary flower-bell pendulous from a short stalk, there is in the prolific form a close cluster of flowers, of which the terminal one expands first, and the others in succession from above downwards, thus forming a cymose raceme.

A FIELD naturalist concludes, after years of observation, that the primrose refutes Darwin's theory that "every known heterostyled plant depends on insects for fertilization," and that "one form of primrose must unite with the other form to produce full fertility." The flowers which have the stigma at the mouth of the corolla are of the "long-styled" form, and are commonly called "pin-eyed," and those flowers which have the stigma half-way down the tube, and the anthers at the mouth are the "short-styled" form, and are commonly called "thrum-eyed." These different forms grow on different roots. On one root all the stigmas of the flowers will be of the "long-styled" form; on another root all will be of the "short-styled" form.

"MRS. MARSH" is a variety of Papaver orientale in which the petals have a white back ground, heavily striped with scarlet, and with a purple blotch near the base. It is one of the finest varieties in cultivation, has an erect habit, and bears the flowers on stiff stalks, thus rendering it an acquisition for the back rows of mixed borders.

THE HEIGHT OF A TREE.—Obtain a right angle triangle of wood with the sloping limb about three feet in length, and with this instrument held with its base parallel with the horizon, take a sight along the sloping limb, directing the line of sight to the apex of the tree, and step backwards or forwards as may be necessary till the base and apex agree with those of the instrument. Put a peg in the ground at this point, and a measurement made thence to the foot of the tree will be equal to the height of the latter—four feet being added as the height of the observer's eye. Another method is to cut a stick three and one-half feet long, and insert it in the ground six inches so as to steady it. This must be done on a sunny day; measure the lengths cast by the shadows of tree and stick, and then ascertain the number of times the stick-shadow goes into the tree-shadow, and the result is the height in yards and fractions of a yard.

INSECTICIDES AND FUNGICIDES.

The following list of the principal insecticides and fungicides and notes as to their uses has been prepared by H. A. Ballou, entomologist on the staff of the Imperial Department of Agriculture for the West Indies:

Paris green, London purple and arsenate of lead, which are known as "stomach poisons," are adapted for use against such insects as are able to bite off portions of their food and swallow the fine particles. Any poison which may be applied to such food would therefore be swallowed and have an opportunity of acting upon the insect.

These poisons would have no effect upon sucking insects, which merely penetrate the tissues of the plant or animal on which they feed, and suck out the juices from within. In dealing with them a "contact poison" must be used, such as soap solution, whale-oil soap, kerosene oil and kerosene emulsion. Tobacco, hellebore and pyrethrum may also be included in this list. These contact poisons all act in the same general way, that is, by stopping up the breathing pores in the sides of the insect's body and thus causing suffocation. Carbon bisulphide and potassium cyanide are used against those insects that are difficult to reach with either stomach or contact poisons, such as borers, ants, underground insects, insects in houses, insects in grain bins, etc. These two insecticides are, however, poisonous, and their use, except by an expert or one well acquainted with them, is attended with considerable danger. Hellebore, pyrethrum, tobacco, lime and sulphur all have their uses both as contact and stomach poisons, but more especially as contact poisons for use against soft-bodied insects, such as grubs, sun-fly larvæ, fleas, plant lice, etc. Of these, pyrethrum and tobacco are probably the most valuable.

Lime, sulphuric acid and copper compounds are the principal materials used as fungicides. The combination most generally employed is a mixture of lime and copper sulphate, known as Bordeaux mixture. The ammoniacal solution of copper carbonate is also well known as a fungicide. With the Bordeaux mixture any of the arsenical poisons may also be used, in which case one spraying will serve to destroy both insects and fungi. With the ammoniacal solution of copper carbonate, however, only the arsenate of lead should be used, since the ammonia has the effect of rendering the arsenic in Paris green or London purple more soluble, and the arsenic will be liable to cause the burning of the foliage of the plants.

The Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture has recently issued a bulletin (No. 68) giving analyses of a large number of the insecticides and fungicides offered for sale in America. These analyses show that great variation occurs in the composition of even such standard materials as Paris green and London purple. Bordeaux mixture can be purchased in the form of a dry powder. It is, however, better to prepare it as required, since chemical changes are likely to take place between the lime and copper sulphate.

I COULD NOT get along without your valuable paper. I have read all the florists' magazines and I must say yours excels them all.—P. W. HENNESSY, Joplin, Mo.

LINCOLN, ILL.

The greenhouse plant of W. H. Gullett & Sons is one of the largest establishments in the state outside of Chicago, and certainly the largest in central Illinois. The business was founded in 1865, by the senior member of the present firm, on a site one block north of the present location, on Logan street. At that time W. H. Gullett was engaged in the nursery business. He began with the erection of a small greenhouse, only 16x24 feet, in the fall of 1865. After two seasons this house was extended and made forty feet long, with a boiler room. In 1870 Mr. Gullett erected two greenhouses 11x75. These narrow and low-roofed houses were the style in use at that time for growing pot plants. They did service for a few years, but were replaced about 1880 or 1881 by two longer and wider houses. In 1879 Walter Bermingham, a florist who had learned his trade under the pioneer florist of this country, Peter Henderson, entered into a partnership under the firm name of Gullett & Bermingham. Mr. Bermingham withdrew from the firm in 1884, and accepted a position in the circuit clerk's office. In the same year Fred Gullett was admitted to a partnership, and continued in the business till February, 1889. At this time a new partnership was formed under the firm name of W. H. Gullett & Sons, the new members of the firm being C. E. Gullett and Wilbur J. Gullett. Contemporaneously with their association with the business the firm began the development of a wholesale trade in cut flowers. The firm erected its first modern rose house in 1889, following that by putting up a carnation house the next year. Since 1890 they have built new houses or remodeled old ones almost every year. This season they have built three iron-gutter rose and carnation houses. Most of their surplus product goes into the St. Louis market.

In the advertisement of R. Vincent, Jr. & Son, White Marsh, Md., page 859, issue for October 15, the prices were quoted per 100 and per 1,000, where it was apparent that per dozen and per 100 was intended.

THE REVIEW does the selling but it seems strange that this time most of the orders have come from the east and south.

To-Bak-Ine Products

Are effective in destroying insects that infest greenhouse plants, palms, etc. They are PURE NICOTINE products, CONTAINING NO AMMONIA, EASILY APPLIED and do not INJURE nor DISCOLOR the most DELICATE flower or foliage.

BURLINGAME, CAL., Sept. 18, 1903.
E. H. HUNT, Florist,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have given To-Bak-Ine (Aphis Punk) a fair trial and are more than pleased with the results.

To-Bak-Ine certainly does the work and in short order, too.
Yours truly,

E. W. McLELLAN.

TO-BAK-INE APHIS PUNK

Is an especially prepared paper thoroughly saturated with pure nicotine, making it the most powerful insecticide known. The ease with which it is used and the fact that it does not injure any flower or plant strongly recommends it.

TO-BAK-INE Fumigating Powder

KILLS ALL KINDS OF APHIS.

"AN ARTICLE OF MERIT — UNIFORM IN STRENGTH."

Produces a slow fumigation which in some cases is very desirable. It is unlike any other powder in the market as it contains no sand, freed from all ammonia, and a definite amount of pure nicotine is added, making it uniform.

DIRECTIONS FOR A HOUSE 100x25 feet.

Use five lbs. of To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Powder, equally divided into five portions, and placed on fine wire cloth or tin plate plates. Pour a little kerosene around on thin edge of piles and then light; it will burn slowly without blazing. Note the fumes of nicotine. Best to fumigate in moist atmosphere.

NOTE — A standard 5-inch pot well filled holds just a pound.

50-lb. bag, $1.50; 100-lb. bag, $3.00.

CHICAGO, Sept. 30, 1903.
E. H. HUNT, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—We have made a thorough test of "To-Bak-Ine" and find it the best preventive as well as cure for green-fly that we have ever experimented with.

We are perfectly satisfied with "To-Bak-Ine" and will use it exclusively.

Yours truly,

PARK RIDGE, ILL., October 2, 1903.
MR. E. H. HUNT, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—I have used your To-Bak-Ine Aphis Punk and To-Bak-Ine Liquid and find that they do all that you claim for them. The punk is certainly very destructive to green-fly as the test that we have made has thoroughly demonstrated this to our satisfaction.

Yours very truly, EMIL BUETTNER.

GLAZING.

I built a greenhouse last fall and the putty is nearly all off on the outside and much of it is out from under the glass on the inside. It dries and crumbles like marble dust. What is the matter with the putty, or would candle wick dipped in white lead be better?

J. H. H.

The putty was probably of a poor quality, either some adulterant having been substituted for whiting or some inferior oils had been used in its make-up. My plan is to get the best putty the local market affords; it need not necessarily be of the purest grade; then mix it with one-twelfth its part by weight of Atlantic white lead, and work in enough pure whiting to bring it back to the desired consistency. The white lead acts as a bond for the putty and also causes it to adhere better to both glass and wood. I do not approve of candle wick dipped in lead, as it becomes too hard for general greenhouse purposes; for ordinary skylights glazed with very heavy glass it is very useful, however.

Department of Plant Registration.

The Conard & Jones Company ask to withdraw the name Leo XIII, as applied to a new rose registered by them on July 30, 1903, and to substitute therefor that of Sir Thomas Lipton, it having been ascertained that a rose under the name of Leo XIII was already in existence at the time of registration. Any one knowing of any reason against the registration, as now applied for, under the name of Sir Thomas Lipton, will please notify promptly.

FIRE INSURANCE.

ED. FLORISTS' REVIEW:—Is there a mutual fire insurance company in existence, operated on plans after the style of the Florists' Hail Association? We are asked one and one-half per cent, $15 on $1,000 insurance, on greenhouses heated by steam and hot water where the rate on dwellings is $5 per $1,000 of insurance. We do not see that the risk on such greenhouses, with a night man on duty, is so great as on dwellings heated by stoves and grates and lighted by lamps or gas.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The market is still loaded down with large quantities of dahlias, cosmos, hardy chrysanthemums and gladioli. This has quite a bad effect on the sale of roses, and particularly on chrysanthemums. At this writing (Monday), one can buy chrysanthemums of the best quality at $6 and $8 per 100, and if wanted in quantity they can be had for much less. The average price on Pacific and Bergmann is $4 per 100. Roses are plentiful, but the good grades sell readily. Carnations are in fine condition and they are producing good flowers. Lawson is short-stemmed, but fine, big blooms. Enchantress is a winner and sells well. In white the same conditions exist as last season—a shortage. The market price on cosmos, if bought in quantity, is 10 cents per bunch. One grower said, this pays for bunching and the string. Asters of the Semple type are still in evidence. Smilax is a glut.

It appears as if all growers have double the amount of Glory of Pacific mums this season. The result is very noticeable. The wholesale houses are all overstocked on this variety, while the white varieties are scarce.

Notes.

Loew & Jones were busy with funeral work last Thursday. They made up fifteen designs which aggregated in value $250. The emblems were all sent to Niles, Ohio.

At the next meeting of the Florists' Club, November 3, chrysanthemums will be discussed. All members are asked to bring specimen blooms.

Randolph & McClements have a house of small ferns for dishes which are worthy of mention.

Geddis & Blind will open their new store at 30 Fifth street, October 31.

Another new wrinkle in the way of a commission man in this market. He carries his office in his hat and his store under his arm. Every day except Monday a messenger makes his calls among the stores with his box of valley, carnations and violets, which are offered at low prices. He hails from the east.

Recent visitors: J. E. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio; B. Stahl, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Gust. A. Geng, Youngstown, O.; Chas. Lindacher, Canton, Ohio, and just returning from Europe.

MONTREAL.

The Market.

The general report on business is fairly good, but trade will not improve so long as the fine autumn weather lasts, as there are yet too many outdoor flowerers. The growers are cutting some fine Bergmann, Midge, Willowbrook and the good early Opah chrysanthemums. These are bringing from $2 to $3 a dozen retail. Roses are improving and are in fair supply. Carnations are good, but have short stems.

Notes.

The last meeting of our club was well attended. C. Wells was elected to membership. The exhibition of Opah chrysanthemums from Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, Mich., was a treat for those present. Jos. Bennett and Geo. Robinson judged the exhibit and reported favorably, giving Opah all its claims. The new canna, Express, was also shown, but it was bruised in transit. The Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club offers Smith & Son its sincere thanks and is hopeful of receiving another exhibit on November 11 and 12, the date of our chrysanthemum show.

W. Whilling read a very good essay upon rock work and at our next meeting we expect a paper by an expert on hardy ferns, Mr. Syrett. A. BEE.

OTTAWA, ONT.

This has been a season long to be remembered by all in this part of the country because of the very unusual weather conditions with which all crops have had to contend. There were two months without a shower, with which to begin the season; the first rain fell on Ascension day. Then came the proverbial forty days of downpour, and on top of that another forty days of heavy rains, all the way to September. However, since the first of September the weather has been all that could be wished for and the middle of October finds us with only slight damage done by frost. But last week saw the end of asters and sweet peas. Chrysanthemums are coming in good shape.

THE principal glass factories started up October 15 for the season's run.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Carnations are beginning to arrive in good quantities, for some of our growers are already cutting from their young stock. In scarlet varieties some very fine Estelle are shown and several large lots of Cressbrook are being displayed in some of our larger stores. Chrysanthemums are very plentiful, both those grown under glass and outdoors. Domoto Bros., the Japanese gardeners, forced about 30,000 this season. They are cutting some very fine Bonaffon at present. They sell at $1.50 to $2 per dozen wholesale. They have also a big stock of late whites in excellent shape. Most of the outside 'mums are grown by Chinese in the neighborhood of San Mateo and their stock, which is up to the usual requirements this season, can be bought at almost any price. We are having ideal weather at present, fairly warm days and long, cool nights. Violets are rather plentiful, but they are not of the first quality yet. We want considerable more damp weather before they will be really good. Roses are somewhat more plentiful and of fair color and stem throughout.

Notes.

Miss McNamara has sold out her store at the Narrow Gauge depot in Oakland.

Thos. Hooper, well-known as foreman for John H. Sievers & Co., has moved his family over to Elmhurst.

J. H. Gilmore, who had charge of the rose houses of E. B. & H. L. Stone Co., has left California and is at present in Florida.

Serveau Brothers report business away ahead of that of last year. This firm carries a very large stock of both ornamental plants and flowers.

CHICAGO CLUB'S EXHIBITION.

The first of the series of exhibitions planned by the Chicago Florists' Club was held at Handel hall, 40 Randolph street, Saturday afternoon, and taxed the capacity of the room, which was considerably larger than any heretofore used for the club's trade shows. The exhibitors were not numerous, the management being somewhat disappointed at the failure of the local growers to be present with blooms of the standard varieties, but the Indiana and Illinois growers came to town in fine style, making not only large exhibits, but staging flowers which were a revelation as to the quality of the early sorts which have recently appeared in the novelty lists. It was noted that the great majority of the chrysanthemums were of European or Australian origin, and wonderful things some of the new earlies are, but two excellent seedlings were shown by C. W. Johnson, who has named them for his employer's wife and his town, respectively, Mrs. H. W. Buckbee, white, and Rockford, yellow. The judges scored them above the very good French sorts shown by the E. G. Hill Co.

The carnations, while not occupying as much room as the chrysanthemums, were of equal quality, the vase of 100 Adonis shown by Hill attracting particular attention. Fiancee was shown in good shape and made quite as favorable an impression as when it was first seen here. Crusader and others were also shown in fine shape by the Chicago Carnation Co. W. N. Rudd staged a nice vase of Phyllis and F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, showed its two good whites, Lady Bountiful and The Belle, also two seedlings under number. The Thompson exhibit was large and included their next season's offerings, all in good order. The B. K. & B. Floral Co., of Richmond, sent Richmond Gem and Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., sent Marion Beauty.

In roses, only two vases were shown, but one of these was the Breitmeyer seedling of Bridesmaid and Testout, which although it has been offered in this market pretty regularly for a couple of years, is just now beginning to be appreciated at its true worth—which shows the value of advertising. The other rose shown was a yellow seedling from Hill, much like Perle. E. H. Hunt staged two fine bunches of violets.

The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind. entered four chrysanthemums for certificates, Cinna, G. Perraud, Ethel Fitzroy and Lord Hopetoun. In line with Mr. Hill's remarks at the C. S. A. convention last year, a vase of Mlle. Cheveraut was staged with the necks under the enormous blooms reinforced by wires. Etienne Bonnefond, buff, was very good, also Mlle. Touzet, the early Chadwick, and Miss Alice Byron, a commercial white. Other sorts in the set were F. S. Vallis, Miss Olive Miller, M. Paul Labbe, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Mrs. Tranter, Mrs. A. McKinley, Mme. Von Andre, Mrs. T. Longley, Mary Inglis, Rastignac, Mlle. E. Chabanne, Mme. Paul Sahut, Choulet and C. J. Salter.

Aside from those entered for certificates, the H. W. Buckbee exhibit included very fine blooms of the following good sorts: Matthew Smith, Mme. E. Nicolaud, Brutus, Durban's Pride, Louis Leroux, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Mrs. Harry Emmerton, Viviani-Morel, Matchless, Mrs. Coombes, Col. Appleton, Alice Byron, Thos. Humphries, Marie Douillet, Geo. Carpenter and C. J. Salter, the latter being particularly good. They also had a vase of sixteen oddities.

Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind., sent twelve fine blooms each of Mrs. Coombes, Alice Byron and Col. Appleton, also one bloom each of Marie Liger, Mongolian Prince, Wallaroo, Mrs. Robinson, Jeannie Falconer, Villa de Bordeaux, J. K. Shaw, Mrs. E. D. Smith, Major Bonnaffon, G. W. Childs, Robert Halliday and Charles Davis. His carnations were Marion Beauty and G. H. Crane.

Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich. sent vases of No. 20, a white seedling of the Mizpah type; No. 26, light pink, and No. 16, pink, both single; also No. 1, a pompon, and blooms of Amorita and Cremo. They also sent a vase of their scarlet canna, The Express.

W. N. Rudd had some good blooms of Ivory, white and pink.

Besides Fiancee, the Chicago Carnation Co. showed Crusader, Reliance, Harlowarden, Moonlight and No. 822A.

The Thompson Co. had Apollo, Prosperity, Mrs. Patten, Boston Market, Gov. Wolcott, Estelle, Adonis, Lawson, Nelson Fisher, Harry Fenn and Enchantress. The Wolcott impressed the growers very favorably.

The Dorner novelties, Lady Bountiful and The Belle, were much admired; they give every promise of being first-class commercial varieties. No. 193, pink, is also a good one. No. 37, variegated light pink, is a large flower of a somewhat unusual color. It had not traveled well.

Bassett & Washburn showed a vase of the California carnation, Hannah Hobart, also ten seedlings raised on their place by Joseph Kahout. These include two good reds and a particularly promising white, the latter the result of a cross of Prosperity and Morning Glory.

Vaughan sent two plants of the Pier-son fern, some solanums and a half-dozen blooms of Mrs. Robinson chrysanthemum. F. A. Baller, Bloomington, Ill., showed six varieties of clematis and the George Wittbold Co. sent down some good palms, dracenas, etc.

The judges were James S. Wilson, Ernst Wienhoeber and E. A. Kanst. They scored the chrysanthemums as follows: Hill exhibits, Lord Hopetoun, 87; Ethel Fitzroy, 86; Cinna, 85. Buckbee exhibits, Mrs. Buckbee, 91; Rockford, 88. The carnations were scored as follows: Chicago Carnation Co. exhibits, Fiancee, 91; Reliance, 89; Crusader, 85; No. 822A, 85. W. N. Rudd exhibit, Phyllis, 90. Thompson exhibits, Nelson Fisher, 87; Mrs. M. A. Patten, 85. Dorner exhibits, Lady Bountiful, 87; The Belle, 86; No. 193, 82; No. 37, 75. Teilmann exhibit, Marion Beauty, 79. B. K. & B. Floral Co. exhibit, Richmond Gem, 75 points.

The Foley premiums were given as follows, for best general display: First, E. G. Hill Co.; second, Thompson Carnation Co.; third, H. W. Buckbee. Commendatory mention was made of each of the other exhibits.

The only possible fault to be found with the exhibition was with the attendance. While the hall was well filled, all of the time, some of the well known faces were missing. Only four retailers presented themselves during the afternoon and a number of those in the wholesale market did not so much as look in. Certainly they would have been well repaid.

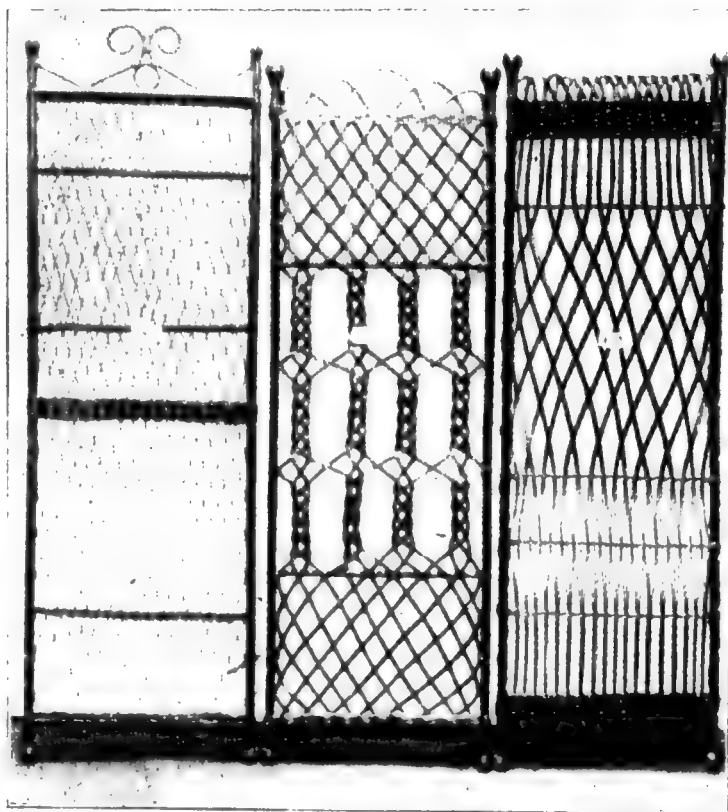

The Supper.

After the exhibits had been removed about fifty adjourned to Becker & Jackson's restaurant for dinner. The tables had been tastefully decorated and every one did justice to as good a dinner as anyone need ever expect for half a dollar. Then the judges were called on for their report, after which Mr. Thompson introduced Philip Breitmeyer, of Detroit, president-elect of the S. A. F., who commended the show and said he hoped to

CHICAGO CLUB'S EXHIBITION.

The first of the series of exhibitions planned by the Chicago Florists' Club was held at Handel hall, 40 Randolph street, Saturday afternoon, and taxed the capacity of the room, which was considerably larger than any heretofore used for the club's trade shows. The exhibitors were not numerous, the management being somewhat disappointed at the failure of the local growers to be present with blooms of the standard varieties, but the Indiana and Illinois growers came to town in fine style, making not only large exhibits, but staging flowers which were a revelation as to the quality of the early sorts which have recently appeared in the novelty lists. It was noted that the great majority of the chrysanthemums were of European or Australian origin, and wonderful things some of the new earlies are, but two excellent seedlings were shown by C. W. Johnson, who has named them for his employer's wife and his town, respectively, Mrs. H. W. Buckbee, white, and Rockford, yellow. The judges scored them above the very good French sorts shown by the E. G. Hill Co.

The carnations, while not occupying as much room as the chrysanthemums, were of equal quality, the vase of 100 Adonis shown by Hill attracting particular attention. Fiancee was shown in good shape and made quite as favorable an impression as when it was first seen here. Crusader and others were also shown in fine shape by the Chicago Carnation Co. W. N. Rudd staged a nice vase of Phyllis and F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, showed its two good whites, Lady Bountiful and The Belle, also two seedlings under number. The Thompson exhibit was large and included their next season's offerings, all in good order. The B. K. & B. Floral Co., of Richmond, sent Richmond Gem and Gunnar Teilmann of Marion, Ind., sent Marion Beauty.

In roses, only two vases were shown, but one of these was the Breitmeyer seedling of Bridesmaid and Testout, which although it has been offered in this market pretty regularly for a couple of years, is just now beginning to be appreciated at its true worth—which shows the value of advertising. The other rose shown was a yellow seedling from Hill much like Perle. E. H. Hunt staged two fine bunches of violets.

The E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., entered four chrysanthemums for certificates, Cinna, G. Perraud, Ethel Fitzroy and Lord Hopetoun. In line with Mr. Hill's remarks at the C. S. A. convention last year, a vase of Mlle. Cheveraut was staged with the necks under the enormous blooms reinforced by wires. Etienne Bonpéfond, buff, was very good, also Mlle. Touzet, the early Chadwick, and Miss Alice Byron, a commercial white. Other sorts in the set were F. S. Vallis, Miss Olive Miller, M. Paul Labbe, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Mrs. Tranter, Mrs. A. McKinley, Mme. Von Andre, Mrs. T. Longley, Mary Inglis, Rastignac, Mlle. E. Chabanne, Mme. Paul Sahut, Choulet and C. J. Salter.

Aside from those entered for certificates, the H. W. Buckbee exhibit included very fine blooms of the following good sorts: Matthew Smith, Mme. E. Nicot, Brutus, Durban's Pride, Louis Leroux, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Mrs. Harry Emmerton, Viviani-Morel, Matchless, Mrs. Coombes, Col. Appleton, Alice Byron, Thos. Humphries, Marie Douillet, Geo. Carpenter and C. J. Salter, the latter being particularly good. They also had a vase of sixteen oddities.

Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind., sent twelve fine blooms each of Mrs. Coombes, Alice Byron and Col. Appleton, also one bloom each of Marie Liger, Mongolian Prince, Wallaroo, Mrs. Robinson, Jeannie Falconer, Villa de Bordeaux, J. K. Shaw, Mrs. E. D. Smith, Major Bonaffon, G. W. Childs, Robert Halliday and Charles Davis. His carnations were Marion Beauty and G. H. Crane.

Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., sent vases of No. 20, a white seedling of the Mizpah type; No. 26, light pink, and No. 16, pink, both single, also No. 1, a pompon, and blooms of Amorita and Creme. They also sent a vase of their scarlet canna, The Express.

W. N. Rudd had some good blooms of Ivory, white and pink.

Besides Fiancee, the Chicago Carnation Co. showed Crusader, Reliance, Harlowarden, Moonlight and No. 822A.

The Thompson Co. had Apollo, Prosperity, Mrs. Patten, Boston Market, Gov. Wolcott, Estelle, Adonis, Lawson, Nelson Fisher, Harry Penn and Enchantress. The Wolcott impressed the growers very favorably.

The Dorner novelties, Lady Bountiful and The Belle, were much admired; they give every promise of being first-class commercial varieties. No. 193, pink, is also a good one. No. 37, variegated light pink, is a large flower of a somewhat unusual color. It had not traveled well.

Bassett & Washburn showed a vase of the California carnation, Hannah Hobart, also ten seedlings raised on their place by Joseph Kahout. These include two good reds and a particularly promising white, the latter the result of a cross of Prosperity and Morning Glory.

Vaughan sent two plants of the Pierson fern, some solanums and a half dozen blooms of Mrs. Robinson chrysanthemum. F. A. Baller, Bloomington, Ill., showed six varieties of Clematis and the George Witthold Co. sent down some good palms, dracenas, etc.

The judges were James S. Wilson, Ernst Wienhoeber and E. A. Kanst. They scored the chrysanthemums as follows: Hill exhibits, Lord Hopetoun, 87; Ethel Fitzroy, 86; Cinna, 85. Buckbee exhibits, Mrs. Buckbee, 91; Rockford, 88. The carnations were scored as follows: Chicago Carnation Co. exhibits, Fiancee, 91; Reliance, 89; Crusader, 85; No. 822A, 85. W. N. Rudd exhibit, Phyllis, 90. Thompson exhibits, Nelson Fisher, 87; Mrs. M. A. Patten, 85. Dorner exhibits, Lady Bountiful, 87; The Belle, 86; No. 193, 82; No. 37, 75. Teilmann exhibit, Marion Beauty, 79. B. K. & B. Floral Co. exhibit, Richmond Gem, 75 points.

The Foley premiums were given as follows, for best general display: First, E. G. Hill Co.; second, Thompson Carnation Co.; third, H. W. Buckbee. Commendatory mention was made of each of the other exhibits.

The only possible fault to be found with the exhibition was with the attendance. While the hall was well filled, all of the time, some of the well known faces were missing. be here again soon to see such another. He was followed by Fred. Dorner, Jr., of Lafayette; Fred. Lemon, of Richmond; Geo. F. Crabb, of Grand Rapids; J. F. Sullivan, of Detroit, and C. W. Johnson, of Rockford. The last speaker was W. N. Rudd, who outlined the plans for making Chicago's the best florists' club in the country. Winterson and Balluff sang and the crowd broke up with a vote of thanks to C. M. Dickinson and E. F. Winterson, to whose efforts the success of the afternoon and evening was due.

GOOD COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

The reproductions from photographs, pages 920-21, give a good idea of the flowers of three reliable early 'mums which are worthy of extended culture. Miss Alice Byron can be had in good shape from October 1 onward to the end of the month, according as the bud is taken, early or otherwise. It is a very pure white, a clean dwarf grower and very large size, and best of all, is a fine keeper, not getting spotted or stained in bad weather.

The two varieties in one picture are Mrs. Coombes and Lady Harriet, Mrs. Coombes being the Japanese on the left. These two sorts can be cut early in October; in fact, at the present writing, October 17, are all cut away. They are two excellent pinks and will give satisfaction to any grower. They will not damp and will give 100 per cent of good flowers.

Neither of these three varieties can be called new, as they were recommended in these notes a year ago and this year have fully maintained their reputations. The photographs were taken by Mr. Herrington, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, who grows these varieties extensively and is almost as enthusiastic on taking pictures as he is on taking prizes.

Other Varieties.

Other good sorts that are now ready for cutting are Mrs. Robinson, the "old standby;" Henry Hurrell, Nellie Pockett, always a beauty and this year finer than ever; H. J. Jones, Robert Halliday and Vivian-Morel. In the novelties, Mrs. Alexander McKinley is developed and is a very pretty flower, reddish salmon in color and dwarf in habit. Donald McLeod is an ideal grower and while its color, yellow spotted with crimson, may not appeal so much to the commercial men who want only self-colored varieties, it will find a place with the exhibition grower. Its petals are long and drooping and the foliage and general appearance particularly pleasing.

Harrison Dick is another very strong grower, easy to handle and will make a place for itself. The color is classed as a reddish terra cotta and probably that describes it as well as anything. Harrison Dick will undoubtedly be heard from later.

Of the last year's novelties Mrs. T. W. Pockett is finished and cut. It is a beautiful and satisfactory variety, and if it were not for the new Cheltoni I would say it was the most beautiful yellow Japanese in cultivation.

C. J. Slater is open fully and on the crown bud, taken the middle of August, is immense. Later buds are producing smaller, flatter flowers and an extended trial proves that it will not displace Appleton, as I thought last year. It is lighter in color than Appleton and will not give so large a percentage of first-class flowers.

Mrs. Thirkell, Millicent Richardson and Lord Salisbury are showing up splendidly. The first named, in particular, will produce a sensation where it was not exhibited last year.

Why is it, I wonder, that so many growers are content to drift along with such varieties as Ivory, Lincoln and such old-timers, when a choice can be had of such splendid sorts as are today exhibited? As well might they try to keep in the front rank with carnations by growing Scott, McGowan and Portia!

Count Van der Stegen is now ready to cut and is a very handsome variety. Crimson and gold in color, it is very striking in appearance.

F. S. Vallis is a Calvat seedling and one of the very largest in size. The days of Madame Carnot and its sport, G. J. Warren, are numbered when we can get magnificent varieties like this that are easily grown. Vallis may easily be taken for a yellow Carnot, almost the only difference being that it is a much stronger grower.

From now on the 'mum lover is in his glory. One after another the novelties are coming out, showing wonderful progress, and this year is going to be one of the most notable in the history of the chrysanthemum. I believe the New York exhibition of the National Society will be a revelation to the average grower who is not posted as to the very newest varieties and the large number of classes, covering every conceivable type, insures an exhibition that for magnitude will probably not again be approached for many years, unless got up under similar auspices. To every grower, large or small, I say, see that New York show if you have to walk home afterward.

WM. DUCKHAM AND CHELTONI.

We have waited long and expectantly for a pink chrysanthemum that should be on an equality with the good white and yellow ones. The outcry has been: "Too much white and yellow; give us pink." And in the endeavor to supply the cut flower market with pink the fickle and uncertain Vivian-Morel has been the grower's mainstay, but with more vexation than profit.

We need no longer deplore the paucity of pinks, for as an early pink variety Mrs. Coombes improves with age and is here to stay. Succeeding it, Mlle. Marie Liger has strengthened the good impression it created last year. In Wm. Duckham, however, we have the advent of a peerless beauty, of surpassing merit, vigorous in growth, stout in stem, well clothed with heavy foliage, and crowned with a flower that may be termed perfection alike in form, finish and color.

Our English friends gave Wm. Duckham great praise when it won the silver medal at Edinburgh last year, but some of their greatest acquisitions have refused to adapt themselves to American conditions. Here we have one that asserts itself at once, attains the zenith of chrysanthemum beauty in its first season and apparently deserves the highest meed of unqualified praise.

Chrysanthemum Wm. Duckham was raised in England from Australian seed, and herein probably lies the secret of its ready adaptability, since the Australian varieties have already shown a facility of response more marked than those entirely of European origin. The flower on page 919 is from a bud taken early in August. Those from later buds differ from this only in showing a greater breadth of petal. The short neck is no detriment; in fact, it rather enhances the beauty of the flower by giving it a slight elevation above its mantle of luxurious foliage, so that the eye can better appreciate its bold, yet graceful contour. The color is a clear, uniform light pink.

Cheltoni is a sport from Nellie Pockett. It is in every respect a counterpart of its parent in a really good shade of yellow, although brighter than is usually seen in a yellow sport from a white variety. There appears to be a slight variation in form, the petals more closely infolding, giving more solidity to the flower. Should this prove a constant characteristic it will make Cheltoni much more amenable to commercial needs, while the private grower for home use will find it a gem. A. H.

NOTES ON NOVELTIES.

That this is a boom year for the chrysanthemum is evident, and nowhere is it more evident than in the list of new varieties that are being tested and are showing such wonderful advances. Of these, perhaps the pinks will be the most sought after. William Duckham is unquestionably the sensation of the year. Every bud, early and late, is producing an exquisite flower, which shows its ease of culture, and its immense size and lovely soft color stamp it as the standard pink of the future for either commercial use or exhibition.

Another pink that would, in the absence of William Duckham, fill a large place is F. A. Cobbold. It is, however, deeper in color, and instead of incurving, as Duckham does, is reflexing as it finishes and will make a noble flower. It is one of the strongest varieties I have ever seen, dwarf and with immense foliage, and as it is of different formation is a worthy companion to Duckham. Leila Filkins is another beautiful pink clean and healthy in growth, and at present resembles a very much improved Morel, but as it finishes the petals droop closer to the stem. The florets are not so broad and massive as the two preceding varieties, but it is a variety that will attract any chrysanthemum lover by its own individuality, and will take the place of Morel because it is of so much better habit.

vance can be seen. Your correspondent of last week, S. A. Hill, speaks of two of them, Lord Alverston and S. T. Wright. These are both very fine, but I think Maynell and Henry Barnes superior to the first named. Lord Alverston is the deeper colored, but smaller than the others, and S. T. Wright is rather too incurving to show the beautiful velvet crimson color. As it finishes it may reflex more, as the description of the raiser states that when placed in the sun it reflexes like an enormous cactus dahlia.

Henry Barnes is a Japanese and shows its wonderful color to the best advantage. It will become a favorite for exhibiting in collections, as its color is so telling, and I do not see why it should not be extensively grown as a commercial crimson.

Maynell is the largest of the crimson section, with broad, massive petals, superb stem and foliage and an individuality all its own. Neither of these varieties are liable to burn in the sun; in fact, they seem to like it. Compared with the old Childs and similar sorts, they show at a glance what wonderful improvement has been effected in the crimson section.

Ben Wells is a monster flower, of delicate flesh color, very strong habit and of the easiest possible culture. Anyone, apparently, can make an exhibition flower out of this variety.

Another monster is Miss Mildred Ware. This variety has petals hanging down ten inches in length and under artificial light is Lawson pink in color, brilliant and glistening. It is a great exhibition variety, as large as Carnot, of similar formation, with fine stem and foliage. In fact, not one of the novelties of this year is weak in stem, but without exception are strong and healthy. BRIAN BORU.

SPIDERS ON CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

I have a house of chrysanthemums, exhibition varieties, that show traces of red spider on the opening blooms. Can any of your experienced correspondents tell me if light treatment with hydrocyanic acid gas would injure the blooms and would be effective enough to kill the spider? The house is 24x25 feet; height at ridgepole 15½ feet, at back gutter nine feet and at front gutter six feet.

H. T.

My experience with hydrocyanic acid gas is not of a character to recommend it to any one. We heard some little while ago that this was to be the only insecticide, but outside of the violet growers it does not appear to find favor. My experience with it on orchids and similar stock was disastrous, and I have not used it since; neither would I recommend any one else to use it. It is too late now to do much in the way of getting the red spider out of the flowers. Personally I would put sulphur on the steam pipes and also paint a little nicotine on the pipe at night. The fumes from the sulphur will kill spider, but if used too strong will bleach the color out of the pink varieties. It will be a good lesson to H. T. to be sure next year that he is free from spider and other insects before the buds show color. One often learns more by his failures than by his successes.

BRIAN BORU.

ROSES.

Handling Summer Bloomers.

During the next few weeks, when 'mums will be plentiful and consequently a slight drop in the demand for roses may be expected, and as the winter blooming stock should now be able to supply the lessened demand, this will be the proper season to prepare the summer blooming stock for the winter's rest.

To get the best results from such varieties as Kaiserin, Ivory, Liberty and Chateaufort, when used for summer work alone, they should have a long period of absolute rest. By beginning now to gradually withhold water and heat they can be reduced to a dormant condition in four or five weeks, that is if they are on benches. If they are planted in solid beds they will require a few weeks more.

While putting them through the ripening process a careful watch must be kept on red spider, as the gradual lessening of the moisture in the house will encourage their increase. Very frequently houses which are undergoing this process are entirely neglected in this respect, many growers being under the impression (at least one would so judge from their actions) that because they are going to lose the foliage anyhow, it does not matter how quickly or by what means it is removed, and the sooner the leaves are off the bushes so much earlier are they ripened. Now these leaves are just as essential to the perfect completion of the ripening process as they are to the plant in the height of its growth, and any rapid denudation of the foliage must have a serious effect on its vitality.

Spider can be held in check under these conditions by an intelligent use of the syringe, using a nozzle with a fine spray, which, if directed aright, needs no great volume of water. The temperature should be gradually reduced till by the time the plants are ripe it should be about 35 degrees at night and should be kept at that figure, or not to exceed 40 degrees, till they are started up again. During the period of rest the ventilators should remain open as much as possible, only closing them during rain, snow, or when there is danger of the ground freezing.

After the foliage is all off there is still need to keep a strict watch on the house, as after a week's sunshine the soil on the bench may get too dry, which may cause the bark to shrivel. A light mulch of leaves or dried grass is a good safeguard against this.

By the beginning of February it will be time to begin preparations for starting them, so that they may be ready to take the place of the winter bloomers which we will have to throw out in May and June. Mulching should now be attended to. It is a great mistake to think we are saving labor by putting the mulch on thick at this season, so that we will not have to renew so frequently. It is very easy to bring a check on the most vigorous stock by this method, a crop of yellow leaves being one of the first signs that the roots are suffering from the exclusion of light and air. Till after the days begin to lengthen one-half inch in depth at one application keeps us on the safe side. Where there is any sign of weakness or trouble in the stock it is safer to withhold the mulch till health again returns. RIBES.

VINCENNES, IND.—W. A. Reiman is doing a nice business and is planning to add two more greenhouses, at the same time opening a down town salesroom.

be here again soon to see such another. He was followed by Fred. Dorner, Jr., of Lafayette; Fred. Lemon, of Richmond; Geo. F. Crabb, of Grand Rapids; J. F. Sullivan, of Detroit, and C. W. Johnson, of Rockford. The last speaker was W. N. Rudd, who outlined the plans for making Chicago's the best florists' club in the country. Winterson and Balluff sang and the crowd broke up with a vote of thanks to C. M. Dickinson and E. F. Winterson, to whose efforts the success of the afternoon and evening was due.

GOOD COMMERCIAL VARIETIES.

The reproductions from photographs, pages 920-21, give a good idea of the flowers of three reliable early 'mums which are worthy of extended culture. Miss Alice Byron can be had in good shape from October 1 onward to the end of the month, according as the bud is taken, early or otherwise. It is a very pure white, a clean dwarf grower and very large size, and best of all, is a fine keeper, not getting spotted or stained in bad weather.

The two varieties in one picture are Mrs. Coombes and Lady Harriet, Mrs. Coombes being the Japanese on the left. These two sorts can be cut early in October; in fact, at the present writing, October 17, are all cut away. They are two excellent pinks and will give satisfaction to any grower. They will not damp and will give 100 per cent of good flowers.

Neither of these three varieties can be called new, as they were recommended in these notes a year ago and this year have fully maintained their reputations. The photographs were taken by Mr. Herrington, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, who grows these varieties extensively and is almost as enthusiastic on taking pictures as he is on taking prizes.

Other Varieties.

Other good sorts that are now ready for cutting are Mrs. Robinson, the "old standby;" Henry Hurrell, Nellie Pockett, always a beauty and this year finer than ever; H. J. Jones, Robert Halliday and Vivian-Morel. In the novelties, Mrs. Alexander McKinley is developed and is a very pretty flower, reddish salmon in color and dwarf in habit. Donald McLeod is an ideal grower and while its color, yellow spotted with crimson, may not appeal so much to the commercial men who want only self-colored varieties, it will find a place with the exhibition grower. Its petals are long and drooping and the foliage and general appearance particularly pleasing.

Harrison Dick is another very strong grower, easy to handle and will make a place for itself. The color is classed as a reddish terra cotta and probably that describes it as well as anything. Harrison Dick will undoubtedly be heard from later.

Of the last year's novelties Mrs. T. W. Pockett is finished and cut. It is a beautiful and satisfactory variety, and if it were not for the new Cheltoni I would say it was the most beautiful yellow Japanese in cultivation.

C. J. Slater is open fully and on the crown bud, taken the middle of August, is immense. Later buds are producing smaller, flatter flowers and an extended trial proves that it will not displace Appleton, as I thought last year. It is lighter in color than Appleton and will not give so large a percentage of first-class flowers.

Mrs. Thirkell, Millicent Richardson and Lord Salisbury are showing up splendidly. The first named, in particular, will produce a sensation where it was not exhibited last year.

Why is it, I wonder, that so many growers are content to drift along with such varieties as Ivory, Lincoln and such old-timers, when a choice can be had of such splendid sorts as are today exhibited? As well might they try to keep in the front rank with carnations by growing Scott, McGowan and Portia!

Count Van der Stegen is now ready to cut and is a very handsome variety. Crimson and gold in color, it is very striking in appearance.

F. S. Vallis is a Calvat seedling and one of the very largest in size. The days of Madame Carnot and its sport, G. J. Warren, are numbered when we can get magnificent varieties like this that are easily grown. Vallis may easily be taken for a yellow Carnot, almost the only difference being that it is a much stronger grower.

From now on the 'mum lover is in his glory. One after another the novelties are coming out, showing wonderful progress, and this year is going to be one of the most notable in the history of the chrysanthemum. I believe the New York exhibition of the National Society will be a revelation to the average grower who is not posted as to the very newest varieties and the large number of classes, covering every conceivable type, insures an exhibition that for magnitude will probably not again be approached for many years, unless got up under similar auspices. To every grower, large or small, I say, see that New York show if you have to walk home afterward.

WM. DUCKHAM AND CHELTONI.

We have waited long and expectantly for a pink chrysanthemum that should be on an equality with the good white and yellow ones. The outcry has been: "Too much white and yellow; give us pink."

And in the endeavor to supply the cut flower market with pink the fickle and uncertain Vivian-Morel has been the grower's mainstay, but with more vexation than profit.

We need no longer deplore the paucity of pinks, for as an early pink variety Mrs. Coombes improves with age and is here to stay. Succeeding it, Mlle. Mari Liger has strengthened the good impression it created last year. In Wm. Duckham, however, we have the advent of peerless beauty, of surpassing merit, vigorous in growth, stout in stem, well clothed with heavy foliage, and crowned with a flower that may be termed perfection alike in form, finish and color.

Our English friends gave Wm. Duckham great praise when it won the silver medal at Edinburgh last year, but some of their greatest acquisitions have refused to adapt themselves to American conditions. Here we have one that asserts itself at once, attains the zenith of chrysanthemum beauty in its first season and apparently deserves the highest meed of unqualified praise.

Chrysanthemum Wm. Duckham was raised in England from Australian seed and herein probably lies the secret of its ready adaptability, since the Australian varieties have already shown a facility of response more marked than those entirely of European origin. The flower on page 919 is from a bud taken early in August. Those from later buds differ from this only in showing a greater breadth of petal. The short neck is no detriment; in fact, it rather enhances the beauty of the flower by giving it a slight elevation above its mantle of luxuriant foliage, so that the eye can better appreciate its bold, yet graceful contour. The color is a clear, uniform light pink.

Cheltoni is a sport from Nellie Pockett. It is in every respect a counterpart of its parent in a really good shade of yellow, although brighter than is usually seen in a yellow sport from a white variety. There appears to be a slight variation in form, the petals more closely in folding, giving more solidity to the flower. Should this prove a constant characteristic it will make Cheltoni much more amenable to commercial needs, while the private grower for home use will find it a gem.

NOTES ON NOVELTIES.

That this is a boom year for the chrysanthemum is evident, and nowhere is it more evident than in the list of new varieties that are being tested and are showing such wonderful advances. Of these perhaps the pinks will be the most sought after. William Duckham is unquestionably the sensation of the year. Every bud, early and late, is producing an exquisite flower, which shows its ease of culture, and its immense size and lovely soft color stamp it as the standard pink of the future for either commercial use or exhibition.

Another pink that would, in the absence of William Duckham, fill a large place is F. A. Cobbold. It is, however, deeper in color, and instead of incurving, as Duckham does, is reflexing as it finishes and will make a noble flower. It is one of the strongest varieties I have ever seen, dwarf and with immense foliage, and as it is of different formation is a worthy companion to Duckham.

Leila Filkins is another beautiful pink, clean and healthy in growth, and at present resembles a very much improved Morel, but as it finishes the petals droop closer to the stem. The florets are not so broad and massive as the two preceding varieties, but it is a variety that will attract any chrysanthemum lover by its own individuality, and will take the place of Morel because it is of so much better habit.

In dark varieties a wonderful nee can be seen. Your correspondent last week, S. A. Hill, speaks of two of them, Lord Alverston and S. T. Wright. These are both very fine, but think Maynell and Henry Barnes superior to the first named. Lord Alverston is the deeper colored, but smaller than the others, and S. T. Wright is rather too inclining to show the beautiful velvety crimson color. As it finishes it may relax more, as the description of the raser states that when placed in the sun it reflexes like an enormous cactus dahlia.

Henry Barnes is a Japanese and shows its wonderful color to the best advantage. It will become a favorite for exhibiting in collections, as its color is so telling, and I do not see why it should not be extensively grown as a commercial crimson.

Maynell is the largest of the crimson section, with broad, massive petals, superb stem and foliage and an individuality all its own. Neither of these varieties are liable to burn in the sun; in fact, they seem to like it. Compared with the old Childs and similar sorts, they show at a glance what wonderful improvement has been effected in the crimson section.

Ben Wells is a monster flower, of delicate flesh color, very strong habit and of the easiest possible culture. Anyone, apparently, can make an exhibition flower out of this variety.

Another monster is Miss Mildred Ware. This variety has petals hanging down ten inches in length and under artificial light is Lawson pink in color, brilliant and sustaining. It is a great exhibition variety, as large as Carnot, of similar coloration, with fine stem and foliage. In fact, not one of the novelties of this year weak in stem, but without exception strong and healthy. BRIAN BORN.

SPIDERS ON CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

I have a house of chrysanthemums, of various varieties, that show traces of spider on the opening blooms. Can any of your experienced correspondents tell me if light treatment with hydrocyanic acid gas would injure the blooms? It would be effective enough to kill the spider. The house is 24x25 feet; height at pole 15½ feet, at back gutter 12 feet and at front gutter six feet.

H. T.

My experience with hydrocyanic acid gas is not of a character to recommend it to any one. We heard some little while ago that this was to be the only insecticide, but outside of the violet growers it does not appear to find favor. My experience with it on orchids and similar stock was disastrous, and I have not used it since; neither would I recommend any one else to use it. It is too late now to do much in the way of getting the red spider out of the flowers. Personally I would put sulphur on the steam pipes and also paint a little nicotine on the pipe at night. The fumes from the sulphur will kill spider, but if used too strong will bleach the color out of the pink varieties. It will be a good lesson to H. T. to be sure next year that he is free from spider and other insects before the buds show color. One often learns more by his failures than by his successes. BRIAN BORN.

ROSES.

Handling Summer Bloomers.

During the next few weeks, when 'mums will be plentiful and consequently a slight drop in the demand for roses may be expected, and as the winter blooming stock should now be able to supply the lessened demand, this will be the proper season to prepare the summer blooming stock for the winter's rest.

To get the best results from such varieties as Kaiserin, Ivory, Liberty and Chateaux, when used for summer work alone, they should have a long period of absolute rest. By beginning now to gradually withhold water and heat they can be reduced to a dormant condition in four or five weeks, that is if they are on benches. If they are planted in solid beds they will require a few weeks more.

While putting them through the ripening process a careful watch must be kept on red spider, as the gradual lessening of the moisture in the house will encourage their increase. Very frequently houses which are undergoing this process are entirely neglected in this respect, many growers being under the impression (at least one would so judge from their actions) that because they are going to lose the foliage anyhow, it does not matter how quickly or by what means it is removed, and the sooner the leaves are off the bushes so much earlier are they ripened. Now these leaves are just as essential to the perfect completion of the ripening process as they are to the plant in the height of its growth, and any rapid denudation of the foliage must have a serious effect on its vitality.

Spider can be held in check under these conditions by an intelligent use of the syringe, using a nozzle with a fine spray, which, if directed aright, needs no great volume of water. The temperature should be gradually reduced till by the time the plants are ripe it should be about 35 degrees at night and should be kept at that figure, or not to exceed 40 degrees, till they are started up again. During the period of rest the ventilators should remain open as much as possible, only closing them during rain, snow, or when there is danger of the ground freezing.

After the foliage is all off there is still need to keep a strict watch on the house, as after a week's sunshine the soil on the bench may get too dry, which may cause the bark to shrivel. A light mulch of leaves or dried grass is a good safeguard against this.

By the beginning of February it will be time to begin preparations for starting them, so that they may be ready to take the place of the winter bloomers which we will have to throw out in May and June. Mulching should now be attended to. It is a great mistake to think we are saving labor by putting the mulch on thick at this season, so that we will not have to renew so frequently. It is very easy to bring a check on the most vigorous stock by this method, a crop of yellow leaves being one of the first signs that the roots are suffering from the exclusion of light and air. Till after the days begin to lengthen one-half inch in depth at one application keeps us on the safe side. Where there is any sign of weakness or trouble in the stock it is safer to withhold the mulch till health again returns. RIBES.

BEST BEDDING ROSES.

Mr. Scott's most timely and instructive article in your issue for October 15, on bedding roses, their treatment, care and planting, merits the attention of all florists who would cater to the great number of plant buyers who annually, as spring comes around, seek for varieties to embellish their lawns and grounds in suburban homes.

Complying with Mr. Scott's request, I append the names of those sorts that are suitable for the purpose he names: President Carnot, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, Meteor, Balduin, Mme. Caroline Testout, Viscountess Folkestone, Gruss an Teplitz, La France, Admiral Dewey, L'Innocence, Bessie Brown, Mme. Jules Grolez, Duchess of Albany, Augustine Guinoiseau, Admiral Schley, Mark Twain, Prince of Bulgarie, Lady Battersea, Ferdinand Jamain, Mme. Antoine Rivoire, Catherine Guillot, Marie Van Houtte, Mme. Lambard, Souvenir de la Malmaison, Sombreuil, Etoile de Lyon, Pink Maman Cochet and White Cochet. The above, in nearly every case, produce fine individual buds and good flowers.

Where effect is desired on the lawn or in the border, and masses of bloom are required, the following are quite effective, but lacking in the qualities that are possessed by the individual blooms in the preceding list: Comtesse Riza Du Parc, Duchess de Brabant, Corallina, Empress Alex. of Russia, Mrs. R. B. Cant, Sylph, Laurette Messimy, Madam Eugene Resal, and most of the Bengal varieties, which include Hermosa, Agrippina, etc.

The following recent introductions are certainly very promising for the purpose described by Mr. Scott:

Comte. A. de Foras, a charming tea variety, bearing variable, high-colored buds and flowers; the colors shown vary from crimson to bright yellow.

Souvenir du Pierre Notting, a very fine citron-colored yellow, with reddish lines; a free blooming tea.

Joseph Hill, a hybrid tea variety, somewhat in the line of Sunrise; a persistent bloomer, and splendid in growth. This is a good companion plant for President Carnot, which it resembles in all save color.

Franz Deegen produces very freely in the open, and its delightful charm of color will certainly make it welcome.

Ideal is a charming sport of La France, which will certainly commend itself to all lovers of fine roses; it differs from its parent in having stiff, erect petals, with less of the light silvery tint than in La France.

Angela Mull is a fine white tea with flowers of good size; the petals are of great substance, and it produces fine, large double flowers.

Mme. Derepas Matrat has been christened by an American firm "the Yellow Cochet;" we understand this has had extensive trial in one or two places in this country, in the open, and that it has done finely.

We have it on the highest authority that a French rosarian will distribute a dwarf everblooming Crimson Rambler. It is said to be Turner's Crimson Rambler in every particular minus the climbing character. This certainly will be a welcome addition to our lists.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.Thanksgiving Blooms.

Plants should now be firmly established, supports in place, and in the case of most varieties a goodly number of buds and blooms in sight. Attention will necessarily be directed toward the Thanksgiving crop, for which there is an increased demand each year. Lawson, Nelson, Joost and Floriana for pink, Crane and Apollo for red, Gov. Roosevelt for crimson and Enchantress for delicate pink, present a good range of color for this occasion, and ought to be in good evidence at that time.

Plants that are growing vigorously should now receive a top dressing of bone dust and fresh soil prepared about a week in advance, in the proportion of six to eight parts soil to one of bone. Turn frequently to prevent excessive heating and apply at the rate of a handful to a row of five or six plants, watering immediately.

The turning and heating of the mixture renders the fertilizing qualities of the bone soluble; therefore in watering give a sufficient quantity to carry these elements within reach of the roots, but see to it that none runs through, thereby losing in solution that which is most valuable to the plants. Two weeks later a light coat of unleached hardwood ashes, followed by an immediate watering, will be of further benefit.

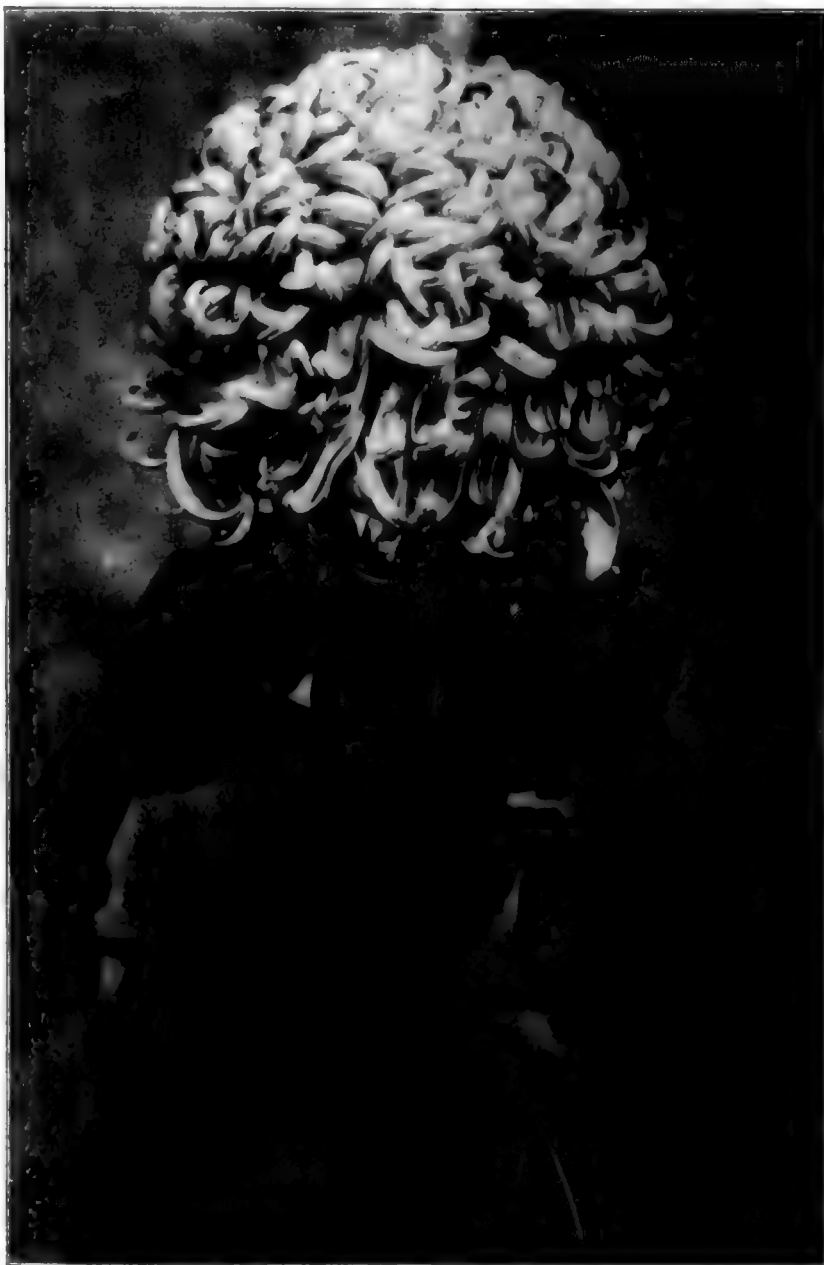

Speaking of wood ashes, while they are a most excellent thing for carnations I am led by observation to advise against its use in equal quantities for each color. Its effect appears to brighten a color, and, in the case of delicate shades, too frequent or liberal applications have been observed to produce streaks, blotches or flecks. Its need is readily seen in a bench of scarlet or crimson whose flowers lack brilliancy.

Allowing crimson and scarlet as capable of the standard or maximum quantity, and which we will rate as 100, I would recommend as the colors of the different sorts are farther removed in intensity from the standard (red or crimson) a less quantity be employed. For example: Gov. Roosevelt and Palmer, 100; Lawson, 75; Nelson, 50; Floriana, 25; Enchantress, 15. Nature of soil and knowledge of a variety's general needs, of course, must be taken into consideration.

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.The Fall Exhibitions.

The fall exhibitions will be upon us in a very short time and to many they are a very interesting time. It is in the fall show reports that we usually look for the first information regarding the varieties that we are expected to invest our cash in the next spring. If a variety shows up well at the November shows and keeps in good shape through the winter we are usually safe in investing in a few when they are offered for sale, but we usually try to steer clear of the varieties that keep themselves hidden up to January and then spring forward and capture high scores, and cups, and medals. They seldom pay for their keep, to say nothing of making you any money. So watch the reports regarding the new varieties, but don't conceive the idea that a variety that is shown at all the shows is better than a variety which makes an equally good impression at one or two shows. The fact that a variety is widely exhibited does not prove its superiority, but rather the hustling quality of its owner.

To the seedling raisers and disseminators these shows are just as interesting and important, as they give them an opportunity to show us just what you want to know. There are a few firms in this country who can introduce a variety successfully on the strength of their own reputation, and these fall shows are not a necessity to them, but there are a great many more who find it necessary to prove their assertions before you are willing to invest in their seedlings. To these the fall shows are a necessity. The comparatively unknown young seedling raiser will find that a decisive victory for his variety at one of these shows will boost the value of his variety only a little less than the same victory at the A. C. S. convention. If you have a pet seedling and wish to advertise it, you should take advantage of these opportunities, if it is in shape to show. All experienced exhibitors know that it is one thing to have a fine lot of blooms on the plants and quite another thing to stage them in good condition 1000 miles away. Careful handling and expert packing are essential, and to pack carnation blooms so that they will not become crushed is a problem that has bothered the very best growers and packers. A bloom that lies on its petals twenty-four hours or more and is shaken around a good deal besides, is not very apt to have a perfectly round form when it is unpacked. When simply packed in layers this is apt to be the result even if you only pack one layer in a box. I have seen many blooms packed with cardboard collars around the calyxes, just below the petals and just a trifle wider than the blooms, and in most cases they traveled well. You must fasten the stems so that the blooms cannot move the least bit, else the cardboard is liable to injure the blooms next to it. Some make use of small pillows, made by rolling tissue paper into rolls thick enough to hold the blooms up off of the bottom. This is all right, too, if you fasten the pillows so they cannot move or weight down the tiers below.

It seems to me the best way is to tack a light stick across the box for each row of blooms to rest on, and you can tie each bloom in place if you wish to do so. Drive the nail through the side of the box and into the end of the stick. This will make each row of blooms independent of all the others and there can be no crushing and you can put in row after row until the box is full to the top. A slight crushing would not prove very serious if the blooms could have a few hours' time to freshen up after being unpacked, but this is in most cases denied them and they must face the judge just about in the shape they were in when unpacked. If the journey is only a few hours it will be enough if you place moistened tissue paper between the stems, providing, of course, that the blooms stood in water at least ten hours after being cut. If the journey is long you should use Kift's little flower bottles. When packed with the stem stuck into one of these bottles a bloom is almost as well off as it was in the vase in your cellar.

ERADICATING THE RUST.

Enclosed find some specimen leaves of Daybreak carnation affected with some kind of rust. Last year we were troubled by the same thing on the Crane, but they are clean so far this year. Can you tell the trouble and advise a remedy?

E. S. F.

The sample leaves show clearly that the carnation plants are infested with the common carnation rust or Septoria dianthi. This disease is usually brought on through too much syringing overhead and not enough ventilation, resulting in a stagnant, moisture-laden atmosphere. To eradicate it is not quite so easy as it is to bring it onto your plants, but growers as a rule do not consider it such a dangerous disease as they did a few years ago, and if it does not make too much headway on the place we do not let it worry us much. Pick off all the diseased leaves and burn them. Then dust your plants thoroughly with lime into which you have mixed about one-fifth its bulk of sulphur. If you have some grape dust on the place it will be, perhaps, a little better than the lime. After a few days, on a bright morning, you can syringe it off, and in the evening, after the plants have dried off again, you should repeat the dusting, leaving it on again for a few days. Throw some lime around under the benches or in the walks and keep the ground dry, so as to keep a dry atmosphere. When you water, run the hose between the rows and let the water soak into the soil without wetting the foliage. Of course the water should run slowly from the hose so as not to wash the soil. You will find that some varieties are very prone to take this disease, while others seem to be almost entirely proof against it. Old Daybreak always did seem to be a great favorite with this disease, and unless it does better with you than it does with most growers who still hold on to it, you will do well to drop it and secure stock of some of the newer varieties. For instance, Enchantress has not shown a sign of any kind of disease with us, and it is far and away ahead of Daybreak in every respect. The growth is stronger and more upright. It comes into bloom earlier and produces a better bloom in September than the old variety ever produced in midwinter. Enchantress is as far ahead of Daybreak as Daybreak was ahead of its predecessors of that color.

PACIFIC COAST.

PLANT NOTES.

There is no reason why Dutch bulbs will not succeed as an ordinary garden flower in California if a few simple, common-sense rules are followed. Three seasons ago I planted the remains of 1,000 Roman hyacinth bulbs in the month of April out in the open field. The foliage had all died down and I had taken them from flats that had received no water since taken from the forcing house. In April, bear in mind, everything in California is dry and dusty, and the bulbs which had shriveled to about one-third of the size they were when I boxed them, although each one had three or four smaller bulbs clinging to it, were planted out in rows in the thoroughly dry soil.

They did not get a drop of water until the following November, when the rains began. The leaves showed themselves in January and about the middle of February I cut about 1,000 spikes of flowers. I gave the bulbs no attention whatever and the following year they produced about 1,500 good stems of bloom. Last spring I cut about 4,000 strong spikes and I dug up the row in July. Where I had originally planted 1,000 discarded Roman hyacinth bulbs I found about 4,000 fine large bulbs, fully fifty per cent larger than anything I have ever received from Europe. I have planted for forcing about 3,000 of them and will report my success with home grown bulbs later on.

I have had about the same results with Dutch hyacinths—that is they have multiplied in the same proportion. The only rule I have followed is to keep them perfectly dry until they received their moisture from the rains. This explains, I think, why the general run of customers do not succeed in keeping their hyacinth bulbs from year to year when planted among other garden plants where there is promiscuous watering.

I find the same rule applies to daffodils, tulips, jonquils, anemones, crocus and narcissus. I transplant my daffodils about every third year, jonquils, tulips and crocus every season, and the anemones once in two years. Later on I will give you some ideas in regard to my experiments with dahlias, gladiolus and other such stock. G.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Forcing the Dahlia.

A great deal has been talked and written and illustrated for the past few months anent the dahlia. As a decorative cut flower for the late summer and fall months it has undoubtedly come to stay. The letter from Mr. Peacock read at a recent meeting of the Pittsburg Florists' Club, and more particularly the remarks of that grand horticulturist, Wm. Falconer, is most interesting. Mr. Falconer said dahlias were at Easter, a "great success." He appears to have grown them in 6-inch pots. There is no doubt at all that five or six inches of soil on a bench, or maybe on the ground, would do them even better and it is quite easy to believe that with the uniform temperature and moisture which can be given them under glass, the flowers would far surpass in size, color and general finish any flowers grown in the open ground, as do many of our florist flowers. We don't alter nature, but the gardener greatly assists nature. If we had nothing but the large double show varieties, forcing them for Easter may never have been desirable, but the charming pompons, cactus and other decorative types have given us flowers of surpassing beauty of form and color. Think what beautiful flowers they must be for church decorations at Easter and, for that matter, for the social functions which quickly follow. You can learn more from pages 870 and 871 of THE REVIEW for October 22 about planting time, temperature, etc., than I can tell you.

Mr. Peacock tells us he has been growing dahlias under glass for thirteen years and I have occasionally heard of a few others doing it. Yet I think it is a very, very small minority of the commercial florists of the country who have given the dahlia any thought as an Easter flower. Some of our largest firms have been making a specialty of supplying the trade with a half dozen of the finest decorative varieties for forcing purposes. So there is no trouble in procuring plants in condition for starting in January.

Lifting and Storing.

Only within a very few days have the dahlias been injured by frost, even in our northeastern states, and now the tops are killed it is time to dig the roots. Any place that will keep potatoes will do for dahlias. I can remember in the "Auld Sod" that they were hung up to the sides of the wall in any cool shed. Beneath a carnation bench, with some old boards under them, will winter them first rate, and the less drip on them the better. Whether these roots, when divided, would be the proper thing to force for Easter is a question I would like to hear about from a specialist. Perhaps they are. We treat the dahlia as if it was an herbaceous plant, as we do a canna, but in its native clime I think it is no more truly herbaceous than is the canna. Yet I will venture an opinion that the best way to prepare a dahlia for forcing would be to take spring propagated cuttings and, instead of planting out, grow them along during summer in 4-inch pots, ripening them off by the middle of September and resting till time to force.

Roses for Pot Forcing.

The time is approaching for lifting hybrid perpetual roses and Ramblers from the ground for Easter and spring blooming plants. We heard the other day from one of the most intelligent gentlemen who travel that a famous Philadelphia grower of fine plants grows his Crimson Ramblers one year in the ground and the following spring lifts them and grows them through the summer in pots and forces them the following winter. This is indisputably the safest and surest way to get a well-flowered plant, and I have advocated that method often. But this famous grower of fine plants, if he does it now, did not do it so a few years ago, for we saw his plants coming into the shed from the field about the 10th of November. The majority of growers lift them in November and force them that winter and many are very successful. The critical time with the Rambler grown in this way is the short period of two months or less between lifting and starting into growth in January, because you do not cut down the Ramblers. You lift them with more or less loss of roots, but leave on all the growth to be supported by an entirely inactive root. With the hybrid perpetuals it is somewhat different. Those you cut down severely when brought in to force; still they often break poorly and weakly through the loss of active roots and the drying out which more or less occurs with the greatest care.

Lifting, Potting and Storing.

but an hour or so only need elapse from the lifting till you have them potted and watered. Now supposing you have them in your own field, or you have to purchase them, do not be in a hurry to lift them. Ten degrees of frost will do them good; it will ripen the wood and denude them of leaves, which would have to be pulled off in any event, the same way that nurserymen scrape off the leaves of all deciduous shrubs and trees when lifting them in the fall. Save all the roots you can when digging; with the Ramblers you do no pruning at lifting; with H. P.'s you can cut off one-third of the growth, which simply makes them more convenient to handle.

Pot firmly just as soon as you possibly can, and immediately give them a thorough watering. In a few hours the soil in the pots will have become dry enough to be firm and not fall out when the pots are laid on the side. The next thing to do is to choose a level, dry spot convenient to the houses and lay the plants down, putting the pots as close together as you can, with the tops of the plants of one row lying over the pots of the others; sort of shingle them. Make the beds of convenient size, say five feet; that would hold nine or ten 6-inch pots lying side by side. Then throw on four or five inches of soil, either dug from the side of the bed or any old, light soil you have on hand. The next thing to do is to get the hose and very judiciously give the soil that covers the roses enough water to about soak through and reach the stems, but no more. If any shriveling of the canes has taken place this will restore them and they keep in this way far better than in any frame or cool house or cellar that was ever used for the purpose.

They will come out in January or whatever time you want to start them, with plump eyes and stems. You might, if the weather in December gets very severe, cover the soil with a few inches of leaves or hay, or any such material that is most readily at hand. Frost that would penetrate through the soil would not hurt them at all, but they might be frozen in a tight mass just when you wanted to bring them in, and then it would cause you trouble, as well as the roses.

I meant to say a little earlier in these notes that lifting them when the wood is green is a great mistake, for then it must ripen prematurely. If the wood is green and any way soft leave them out till end of November. When the wood shows ripeness and the leaves are falling is the time to dig.

ASPARAGUS MYRIOCLADUS.

Our attention has been called to the fact that the note "from a British writer" quoted under the above head in our issue for October 8, page 792, and which we found published as original matter in a mid-summer number of the Austral-Culturist, of Melbourne, Australia, first appeared, with an illustration, in the American Florist of April 4, 1903, page 383. We take this first opportunity since the facts have come to our attention to give proper credit to the original source of this note.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

These are strenuous days in Gotham, with a hot municipal campaign, and Dowie seeking to reform the town, but this has no energizing effect upon the flower business, which, after all, is the one thing needful, nor will there be any appreciable revival until the killing frosts have stopped the flood of outdoor bloom. The theater openings occur weekly and absorb a goodly quantity of flowers, and the football enthusiasts make their existence evident by the creation of a demand for violets and chrysanthemums far beyond the ordinary. Never were 'mums at so low an ebb in price so early in the season, and never was the supply so much in advance of the demand. Society celebrates again next week at the dog show, and the week following the equine exhibition, then comes the greatest 'mum show of the season, and by that time we hope Wall street will wake up, and rise, and everybody will be prosperous again and the florist will have his share of the general good times, which are so close at hand.

Various Notes.

In addition to the horticultural exhibitions mentioned in my last, the Suffolk County Association holds its annual show this week, at Bay Shore, L. I. The floor space for the New York show is 70,000 square feet and an attendance of 100,000 visitors is expected.

The new Breitmeyer rose displayed its beauty and asserted its right to recognition in the window of Charles Thorley for several days last week, and on Saturday after a week's cutting, and exposure to heat and air, they still retained their beauty and fragrance and attracted much admiration from the passing throng. It is certainly a rose that has come to stay. It will be shown at all the fall exhibitions. Fred Breitmeyer accompanied his rose to New York, and upheld his reputation for strenuousness while in the city, visiting the great rose establishments of Ernst Asmus and Paul M. Pierson and fraternizing with the wholesalers and with the Peter Henderson people, with the latter having absorbed some of his practical ideas of the florists' business.

The visit to Mr. Asmus found that gentleman slowly recovering from his serious illness of the summer, and preparing for his trip to the south, where he will spend the winter. It will interest you to know the names of the roses grown by Mr. Asmus. While nearly all rose growers in this vicinity confine themselves to propagating Brides and Maids, in West Hoboken and Gloster, you will find, in addition, the new Breitmeyer rose and American Beauty, Killarney, Cusin, Morgan, Testout, Deegen, Liberty, Queen of Edgely, Kaiserin, No. "200," Watteville, Ivory, Golden Gate, Carnot, Hoste, Ideal and Canadian Queen, and best of all a demand that insures a complete sale for all of them. The Asmus establishment is one of the most complete and successful in the United States, and under the expert management of his sons, both branches of the immense plant are models of neatness and practical accomplishment.

The next meeting of the New York Florists' Club takes place November 9, and will be especially interesting because of an exhibit of the new Breitmeyer rose and readings by Alexander Wallace from his new book on the heather, a work that will win for its author the enthusiastic praise of every man with Scotch blood in his veins.

A new wholesaler will endeavor to woo fickle fortune on West Twenty-eighth street about November 1. Dame Rumor has selected one of two fine spots for the wooing and another week will show which way the cat jumps.

The florists' business of the late F. J. A. Schaefer, of Newburg, has been purchased by his daughter, wife of Fred Chadborn, president of the Chadborn Automatic Ventilator Co., and his son, F. W. Schaefer, and will be continued on generous lines and with the addition of a nursery department as well. Mr. Chadborn was in Mamaroneck last week installing two of his machines, after his honeymoon trip to the Delaware Water Gap. The Schaefer plant has over twenty modern greenhouses and the latest improvements, including automatic ventilators in all the houses.

J. I. Raynor expects shipments of Adiantum Croweanum to begin again about November 1.

Langjahr's new ice-box and store fixtures are up to date.

Gardenias and cattleyas abound at Young & Elliott's and every variety of commercial orchid is offered by James McManus, whose shipments to out-of-town florists are developing into a continuous performance.

Small & Sons had big weddings last week, at Flushing and Brooklyn. Their windows were very attractive with electric lights, vandas, cattleyas, dendrobiums, cyrtipediums, with oak leaves and crotons, while red dahlias, Roosevelt carnations and Farleyense made one window especially beautiful.

Fleischman had an immense Anna Foster trimmed with wide mauve ribbon, as a center the other day, with huge vases of dollar-a-piece 'mums in the foreground that brought even blase promenaders to a halt, while at Thorley's 'mums of the Twombly grade of bloom, and Breitmeyer roses with Farleyense were enough to attract constant lovers of the artistic.

Mackintosh's new electric did duty last Saturday for the first time. It is an illuminator, sure enough. He had a big political wedding last week, when the daughter of Barney Biglin made her venture into the sea of matrimony at the Earlington hotel. White 'mums and roses, curtains of smilax and autumn leaves made up the decoration.

The sale of the large plants from the Biltmore Estate was continued at Elliott's last Friday and another large attendance of prominent retailers absorbed the balance of the goods at very satisfactory prices.

Notes of a Boston Trip.

A call at the L. H. Foster greenhouses, at Dorchester, Mass., last week found that gentleman booking orders for Bostoniensis and Anna Foster in a fine new office, in keeping with the growing business of the past two years, during which time double the amount of glass has been found necessary to provide stock for his customers, especially of Anna Foster. The graceful fern is constantly growing in popularity and is prized especially for its fine keeping qualities. Mr. Foster has a sport from Anna Foster that is even more dainty and unique than its parent, and another year will see a new aspirant for public favor in the fern family that cannot fail to win its way.

The Boston Flower Market is a winner. It opened on the ground floor last April, sold out its stalls, every one of them at auction, the premiums over the rentals being $6,290. Its 8,000 square feet of space is already outgrown, and 158 stalls is not enough. The lowest premium at the sale was $13, the highest $80. The market has a ten-year lease and the basement has been let so that it pays $400 more than its cost. The Waban Conservatory folks have a large space in the basement for sorting and storage.

I met Elijah Wood, popularly and lovingly known from Boston to the Pacific as "Little Woody," as young as ever and as enthusiastic an Odd Fellow as he has been for "nigh on to thirty year."

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Trade the past week was rather unsteady. Shipping business was light, perhaps due to most of the country buyers having a good supply of 'mums on hand. Carnations sold well but it was difficult to keep roses moving at respectable figures. There are plenty 'mums in the market to meet all demands and prices seem to be a shade below former seasons. The increased local supply in nearly all lines is now being felt in this market and there is almost enough home-grown stock to meet all ordinary requirements. Violets are coming in more freely and quality is improving.

Notes.

Mr. Zweifel is cutting some very fine Enchantress carnations which bring top-notch prices.

Mrs. Ennis has opened a flower department at the Boston store and reports good trade.

Aug. Kellner is about completing two houses to be used for decorative stock. Mr. Kellner is making a specialty of decorating and had several big jobs the past week.

The coal situation is far different from this time last season. Coal is now being offered at reasonable figures and most of the yards are completely filled up. It was reported that several vessels chartered for this port were consigned to other ports the past month, owing to the crowded condition of the coal yards and also the danger of fire, which occurred in some of the yards, in the immense piles of soft coal.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. took in a carload of azaleas the past week and also made several large shipments of palms to Pacific coast points. INCOG.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The business done in cut flowers is not in a satisfactory condition to any but chrysanthemum growers. There are entirely too many flowers coming into town to be used to advantage. Ivory, Mrs. Henry Robinson and Timothy Eaton have been added to the list of white chrysanthemums. The last named variety is very fine, and has brought the highest price so far obtained, although the number received is small. The cold nights have injured all outdoor stock excepting cosmos, which is still very plentiful. The dahlia wound up its season with a rush, S. S. Pennock filling an order for 6,000 of these flowers one evening this week. There have been some very large orders this week, consuming great quantities of stock.

The Home of Liberty.

Just think of 12,000 Liberties all on one place, three-quarters of them under one roof, or, rather, within the bounds of four walls! Such a thing was unknown here till this season, when A. Farenwald erected his new range of eight houses on the Dietsch pattern, with short roof bars and no partitions. His Liberties are a beautiful sight, full of vigor, with quantities of buds giving promise of fine crops this season. No stakes are used, the plants being of erect habit. Both young and carried-over stock are grown in ground beds chiefly, although some are in benches. The resources of the place were taxed to produce enough stock to fill the new range, a couple of thousand were purchased, all that several growers could furnish, but half the last section was planted with Beauties. Four of the six older houses are also planted with Beauties, making about 6,500 plants of this variety. Two of the houses filled with carried-over stock show remarkable vigor, the plants being seven or eight feet high and very bushy after three months' growth. There is every reason to expect a large preponderance of specials from one of these houses, which was just coming in. Unfortunately, time did not permit of a visit to Edward Towill's place, near by. Mr. Towill is also a Liberty-Beauty specialist, and has added considerable glass this season. His plants are said to be in fine shape.

Notes.

Joseph Heacock has just completed a violet house, 11x60 feet, for his daughter. The house adjoins a large palm house, and will be filled with single violets.

Mrs. M. D. Young has taken the store and greenhouses of Mrs. J. Wolff, Sr., at Ridge avenue and Dauphin street. A fall opening was held on Friday and Saturday.

I. Leech, lately with J. J. Habermehl's Son, has gone west to take a position with C. A. Samuelson, of Chicago.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., has just returned from a successful business trip.

Charles E. and Mrs. Meehan celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding on Saturday evening.

M. Rice & Co. have just received two certificates of merit, awarded them at the S. & F. exhibition at Milwaukee. They are most creditably gotten up.

Samuel S. Pennock received the first Timothy Eaton of the season.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving some nice mignonette.

Wm. J. Baker is handling some fine Ivory, as well as good Maidenhair fern.

C. A. Dunn & Co. are pushing things at a lively rate and handling lots of valley and adiantum.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Flower Market has been called for Tuesday, November 3, at 1 p. m., at the Market to decide, first, whether the beginning of the fiscal year shall be changed from October 1 to July 1; second, whether the clause limiting each stockholder to fifty shares shall be abolished. All stockholders who are unable to be present are requested to send their proxies with instructions as to how they wish to vote. A two-thirds vote of the stock is necessary to carry each amendment.

Bowling.

The following is an account of the deciding game between the Growers and Dealers, furnished by Walter N. Yates:

The Dealers win the deciding contest. The other contests between the Dealers and Growers were close and exciting, but the deciding match was heartrending—to the Growers. As in the second contest, the Growers won the first two games with a good margin and were in the lead an even 100 pins when the third game started. This lead was held until the beginning of the eighth frame, when the calamity occurred. When the wreck was cleared away the Dealers were two pins ahead, thus winning the final and deciding match by making up over 100 pins in the last three frames. Rather exciting? Well, just ask the boys! The following are the scores:

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business conditions were somewhat better the past week, owing largely to several important weddings. An increased demand for funeral work was also noted, but trade in cut flowers is slow in opening up. The weather continues warm during the day, with cool nights. The wholesale market is still stocked with plenty of everything. The cut of chrysanthemums is increasing and the blooms are of fair quality. Cooler weather is wanted to improve the 'mum market. As to quality, some good Yellow Queen and Col. Appleton sold at $3 per dozen. Glory of Pacific and Bergmann are not selling so well. Other varieties are slow in making their appearance. Mrs. Robinson and Ivory are promised for this week.

American Beauties are in good demand and are pretty well cleaned up every day; $3 per dozen is the top price for the fancies, which are still limited, but there seems to be plenty of the other grades, which sell according to length of stem. In smaller roses Brides and Bridesmaids are over-plentiful, but very few are what can be called fancy stock. These sell at $2.50 in hundred lots. A few choice Meteors and Carnots bring $6 per 100. Perles, Golden Gates and Ivory bring $4 and $5 for the best and cheaper in big lots. The rose market, of course, is suffering from the increasing supply of chrysanthemums. Fancy stock in carnations is very short at the present time and the top price is $2 per 100. Of the good common stock there is enough for the demand. This stock is good in flower, but very short in stem; $1 to $1.50 is what these bring. Good Daybreak is scarce and very much wanted.

Violets are selling at from 25 to 35 cents in small lots. They are looking very much better and are coming with very fine, long stems and good color. The demand is good at the retail stores. Lily of the valley has met with good sales the past week, owing to many weddings; $4 and $5 per 100 is asked for the best and $3 for some poor stuff. Cosmos is about over, as is all other outdoor stock. Romans and Paper Whites are expected soon; in fact, a few are in now. Callas, too, are beginning to show up.

Various Notes.

August Schuerman, of the Schuerman Floral Co., will begin this week decorating the large coliseum in the Exposition building, for the horse show which opens next week. The decorations, Mr. Schuerman says, will be handsomer than ever and on a much larger scale.

Will Adels has left the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers and reports that he will open a place of his own at Salisbury and Blair avenue, North St. Louis.

George Ostertag, who is with his sister Mary, on Grand avenue, reports a busy week, with party work. A "violet party," which used up some 500 bunches of violets, was a big affair.

Mrs. Newman, at Olive street and Spring avenue, makes a fine show in her large window, with a choice lot of cut flowers and plants. Miss Armstrong, who is with Mrs. Newman, reports business very satisfactory.

The Reissen Floral Co. reports a great deal of funeral work the past week, with several large weddings booked for next month.

Henry Lohrens, of the Park Floral Co., received last week a big lot of palms from Joseph Heacock. They came in good condition and Henry says trade has opened up nicely on them.

Miss Rosa Arata reports that business in her section is very good. Miss Rosa keeps a choice lot of cut flowers and plants in her place at Lafayette and Jefferson avenues.

C. Young & Sons Co., on Olive street, are kept very busy in their bulb department, in which they have a big shipping trade. James Arata, at this place, has fully recovered from his sore hands, caused by poisoning this summer, Jim says, by handling balsams.

S. Silverstone, of the St. Louis Palm & Floral Co., says that trade is picking up, with all kinds of work in both fresh and artificial flowers.

The Engelmann Botanical Club will hold its meeting this week at the Central High School. F. W. Taylor, of the department of agriculture and horticulture at the World's Fair, will give the address of the evening.

BUFFALO.

Current Comment.

You might pronounce business as fairly good and promising to be considerably better, and everybody is getting a share of it. The last rose of summer has disappeared and her lovely companions are gone, so the salvia and dahlia and alas, the cosmos said, "I'll not leave you alone, I'll go, too." When there is nothing in the garden and fields but the sear and yellow leaf, and little flakes of snow find a resting place in your eye, our 'mums and roses and carnations seem to take on a much enhanced value, not alone a money value, but they inspire admiration, fondness, love and perhaps veneration, and now we are in it again for the next seven months or until the "Daffie down dille" unfolds her golden petals in the spring. The above is rather an attenuated way of saying that we have had a killing frost.

Joseph H. Rebstock has had a few fashionable weddings of late and Joseph's recently fractured leg is so far progressed toward its normal condition that he was able to boss the job. That most enterprising and energetic young lady, Miss Rachel Rebstock, has also had some large decorations. Rachel is a hustler, if it's gallant to apply such a phrase to a member of that slight majority of the world's population, which makes it worth while for the other slight minority to exist at all.

Byrne & Slattery are busy securing material for two aristocratic weddings that come off the first days of next month.

We went round the corner a few days ago and found John Pickleman at home in his fine store on West Chippewa street. This is a much frequented street, the outlet from the fashionable west side to our Main street, where Mrs. Leathersole drives down to do her shopping. John, you have a fine store, and ought to thrive immensely, which no doubt you will.

Mr. Arthur Beyer keeps up a most attractive window at W. J. Palmer's uptown store; never two days alike, best kind of "adv." Arthur was not educated "New Yauak," but he gets there just the same. Mr. Palmer sticks to the old stand, where there is always a steady flow of business.

There is hot rivalry between S. A. Anderson and J. H. Rebstock over cyclamen. A few plants are to be competed for and the loser pays for a supper for the two judges and the two principals. The betting is 11 to 8 in favor of Anderson, with plenty of takers of the odds.

I had the pleasure to call very recently on that really wonderful gardener, Charlie Sandiford, at the J. J. Albright place. It is only a miniature place in size, but it is a little bower of beauty. Cattleya labiata a sheet of bloom, but it was the 'mums we went to see, and they are indeed well done. Many new and beautiful varieties. Charles has a "walk-over" for several very substantial prizes at the Meldrum show, unless some emperor of the craft steps in, and I do not know then that the Ferry street blooms can be beaten. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The horse show has given an impetus to local trade this week, violets and orchids getting the greatest benefit, but all along the line conditions have improved more or less. Perhaps the frosty weather has had as much to do with the change as any other factor, for there is a tone which was lacking as long as the outdoor stock was in the market. Of course the cool weather has served to reduce cuts a little.

There are better supplies of Beauties, but all grades are moving according to their deserts. Good Brides and Maids are not plentiful, but qualities should quickly improve if the bright, crisp weather holds. Carnations are averaging better returns than in the preceding two or three weeks. Chrysanthemums move briskly if not at unusually remunerative prices. Pink is more plentiful; yellow has been abundant for several weeks. The bulk of the stock moves at from $1.50 to $2 a dozen. Violets are improving in quality and good prices have been realized for first-class stock, but poor bunches will not sell at all and pull down the averages badly. Valley is plentiful. Asparagus and smilax are in large supply.

Various Notes.

There has been a great call for orchids this week. E. C. Amling had 200 fine cattleyas from an eastern grower and ran short.

Peter Reinberg is at Fox Lake this week, shooting.

Mrs. George R. Scott is recovering from a severe illness with bronchitis.

George Reinberg on October 26 began propagating for the season of 1904.

Weiland & Risch have a pink sport of Timothy Eaton of which they expect great things. In about ten days they will cut this variety in three colors—white, yellow and pink.

George Piepgras is again on duty at Bentley's, after two months in the hospital.

Burglars visited the home of Mrs. Pieser, mother of the Pieser brothers, of Kennicott's, last Sunday night and made way with all the solid silver.

GARDENING UNDER GLASS

CUCUMBERS, fancy hothouse, are quoted at Chicago at from 50 to 75 cents per dozen.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—Cal. Osborn, who has a fruit farm of five acres, has bought the R. Johnson greenhouse and will remove it to his property, to be used for forcing vegetables.

CUCUMBERS.

Considerable trouble is sometimes experienced in starting the seeds of cucumbers, especially during the short, dull days, through their damping off just after germination has taken place. By careful planting the danger of this trouble may be considerably lessened. By a little study of the seed it will be seen that the embryo breaks through the shell at the pointed or thin end, the root being first emitted. When seeds are carelessly sown the little plant just after germination, is often so awkwardly placed that it is unable to extricate itself and succumbs in the attempt. But if the seeds are planted so that the root and top are free to take their natural course without any handicap, the danger of their dying off is considerably lessened.

A light, sandy compost should be used. The seeds planted singly in small pots, and the pots plunged in a bed with a good bottom heat. The soil should be kept moist, but not over wet, and the atmosphere kept rather close until the seeds have started, but as soon as they are well up, removal to lighter and airier quarters will prevent their becoming drawn. Shade from strong sunlight will be beneficial for a few days, until the plants gain strength to enable them to stand without wilting. The temperature at which we have found cucumbers to succeed best is 65 degrees by night, with a rise of 15 degrees by day.

The most troublesome insect enemy is red spider and frequent syringings are necessary to keep this in check, but care should be taken not to use too much force, as the foliage is soft and easily lacerated. Both green and black fly sometimes put in their appearance, but if tobacco stems are kept around and changed occasionally when they begin to lose strength, there should not be much trouble from this source. Smoking should never be resorted to if it can possibly be avoided, as it is almost sure to result in damage to the foliage. W. S. CROYDON.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

NICOTIANA SANDERAE.—One of the most strikingly beautiful plants of the year was raised by Messrs. Sander & Sons, of St. Albans, and exhibited by them at the Temple and elsewhere. N. affinis, with its fragrant white flowers, is a universal favorite. Less well known is a Brazilian species, N. Forgetiana, which bears numerous red flowers. By crossing the two Messrs. Sander obtained a plant of bushy habit, with bold oblong leaves tapering at the base, and a loosely-branched inflorescence bearing a profusion of rosy-carmine flowers.

FLOWERS AT FUNERALS.—For some years past there has been a tendency in Paris, owing to the excessive extent to which the practice has been carried, as elsewhere, to request that no flowers or wreaths should be sent on the occasion of a death. As this custom becomes more popular it will entail considerable loss on the florists. A member of the Societe Nationale d'Horticulture who lately died left a request that no flowers should be sent, and as if to compensate for the loss to trade bequeathed a thousand francs to the society above named.

VICTORIA REGIA.—F. W. Moore, Royal Botanic Gardens, Glasnevin, Dublin, writes: "Two large and fully developed flower buds on the plant of Victoria regia in this garden opened simultaneously, and remained open during the night and also during the following day. One leaf only was developed with these buds, which were on opposite sides of the plant. This is a unique experience in my cultivation of this glorious aquatic, extending now over many years. I have previously only seen one flower open, although a strong bud has frequently been above the water while it was in flower, but this bud would not open for two days after the open flower had withered. Cultivators of the victoria will also know that with each flower a new leaf appears, these young leaves having frequently to be cut out to prevent overcrowding."

NEVADA, MO.—Trade is very good for the time of year. We have no killing frost as yet, so flowers are still blooming outdoors. J. W. Primmer, who has leased the Weltmer greenhouses, reports demand greater than supply. He has a very fine house of Asparagus plumosus that is setting seed nicely. Conditions here seem to be very good for growing asparagus seed, as one heavy crop from these plants has already been marketed.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Abundance of stock and very little business was the general complaint the last week. Roses, and Beauties in particular, were a glut and a very large waste on the poorer grades of stock was the result. Carnations and chrysanthemums were in better demand than the week previous. What is needed is good frosty weather to kill the outdoor stuff, which is still very fine. The chrysanthemum is here in large quantities. Robinson, Henderson, October Sunshine, Lady Harriet and Ivory are the fancy varieties which, if good, sell at from $1 to $2.50 per dozen. The majority of the stock sells at from $4 to $6 per 100.

Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams, at a recent wedding decoration, used bay trees, autumn leaves, wild smilax and chrysanthemums. The effect was simply grand and quite unique.

A. W. Smith was very busy with funeral work last week. Among the large orders was one for twelve floral emblems from the American Bridge Builders' Union, costing more than $400.

One of the most attractive wedding decorations of this season was put up by Randolph & McClements on Thursday, for the Liggett-Armstrong nuptials at Edgeworth.

Last Sunday opened the annual chrysanthemum show at Schenley park. The attendance was very large. Superintendent Burke and his foreman, J. W. Jones, are to be congratulated on their success.

Casper Limbach is erecting a new brick store on Maple street, which will cost $10,000. He reports that the glass business is very good.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving some good Beauties from the Rose Co., at Bakerstown.

E. C. Ludwig has secured the decoration for the Scott wedding at West Economy.

Visitors: Geo. Schomer, Connellsville; J. P. Smith and J. E. Black, Grove City. Hoo-Hoo.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THERE is record of a recent sale of 3,000 pounds of cucumber seed at 75 cents spot cash.

SIXTY girls employed in the picking room of the Madson Seed Co., Manitowoc, Wis., struck October 26 for higher wages.

A STILL hunt for sweet corn is still being engaged in; a cute hunt for cucumber may also be mentioned, if it will be allowed.

HENRY NUNGESSER & Co., New York, report the red clover market very firm. Alfalfa is scarce and steadily advancing. Bromus inernis is also short.

WITH the pickle men anxious to buy cucumber seed, and the canners looking for sweet corn, the seedsman who is not satisfied with the outlook must be shy on supplies.

If onions will go up to where they should, and cabbage keep on spoiling, there may be a chance to make some money without having all the sweet corn and cucumber there is.

THE Western Seed and Irrigation Co., Frank T. Emerson, manager, expects to be ready by November 15 to remove from Waterloo to Fremont, Neb., where a new building is nearing completion.

THERE seems to be no great shortage on anything in the line of seed staples except sweet corn and cucumber seed. There is no oversupply of anything, either, and from all accounts it looks as though the coming season will be one of uniformly good prices, and a general steady demand as soon as the smaller buyers are convinced that no gold bricks are being offered.

THE Charlevoix, Mich. Sentinel is authority for the statement that the contract crop of seed peas handled through the Charlevoix warehouse of the D. M. Perry Co., will aggregate 80,000 bushels, representing a value of more than $100,000.

THE John H. Allan Seed Company, a New York corporation, of which E. M. Parmelee, of Sheboygan, is president, having a capital stock of $50,000, of which not more than $25,000 is represented in Wisconsin, has filed articles to operate in that state.

ADVANCE price lists from the east ask fair values for choice stocks. Wax beans are where the old-timers think they ought to be, and altogether wholesale price lists seem to be more in accordance with a fair margin of profit than they have been for some time.

THE market for clover seed is just beginning to show its annual activity. Contract grade is now bringing $10.65 to $10.75 per 100 lbs. at Chicago. Experts claim that the crop is going to be considerably smaller than last year, though some states—and Illinois is one of them—report a slightly larger yield.

AMONG the novelties offered this season by Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., Paris, France, is Cauliflower Incomparable, resembling Autumn Giant, but earlier; Three-Podded pea, resembling the well known French pea, Clamart, largely grown around Paris for canning purposes, early, pods well filled and usually produced in trebles; Globe Artichoke Perpetual, so named because in the south of France it affords heads nearly all the year around, unusually early in any district.

PHILADELPHIA:—The demand for beans from the south is quite heavy, with a very light supply. Orders for some of the most popular varieties have had to be turned down on account of no stock. Much inquiry is being made for cucumber and tomato seed and some of the large planters are already buying their stock for spring's planting. This is evidently a judicious move on their part. Just what to do for vine seeds is a very perplexing question. Really good Colorado grown Rocky Ford canteloupe seed is not going to be so cheap after all. Much of the seed gathered from melons spoiled for fruit by early frost has been found to have sprouted in the fruit and the subsequent cleansing process has removed all traces of the sprout and the seed to all appearances looks perfect, although valueless for seed. This seed is being offered by some sources as low as 10 cents per pound. A strictly reliable grade is worth from 200 to 300 per cent higher. All fields of large and late maturing melons planted in the vicinity of Philadelphia were a complete loss. All lines of bulbs are moving very rapidly and it looks as though stocks will be cleaned up before the end of the season.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have the American Association of Bankers with us this week and there has been quite a demand for decorative stuff in consequence. The reception by the California State Board of Trade on Tuesday was a very elaborate affair and a large quantity of flowers was used. Business is very fair, considering the abundance of flowers. There have been a goodly number of weddings during the past week and a fair amount of funeral work has added to the volume of trade. Mums are in splendid shape and can be had at almost any price. Bunches containing a dozen large, perfect flowers nicely mixed with wild ferns can be bought on any of the street corners for 10 cents. This is rather demoralizing to the store trade but stock is moving fairly well all around and I do not hear many complaints. Carnations are plentiful as most of the growers are cutting from their new stock. Many of the flowers, however, come into the market with very weak stems. I am inclined to think that a great many of the young plants have been allowed to run up and flower during the present warm spell when it would have been better had they been pinched back and only allowed to bloom when the days and nights become much cooler. The wholesale price of carnations has advanced from 5 to 10 cents per dozen during the last week. Roses are still backward and command very fair prices. Cosmos, gailardias and marigolds are on the wane and gladioli have entirely disappeared. Violets are in fair supply but are weak of stem and small of flower and it is impossible to keep them longer than a few hours after they are picked.

Notes.

It is wonderful, when one stops to consider, the inroads into our pet calling made by the Japanese gardeners. The Chinaman have been content to grow outside stock exclusively, but the Japs are devoting themselves to greenhouse work almost exclusively. One of the largest plants on this coast is owned by Domoto Bros., at Fruitvale and Fitchburg. They have in all about twenty houses devoted to palms, ferns, 'mums, carnations and roses. In Elmhurst and Fruitvale another Japanese firm has ten houses devoted to carnations and 'mums. At Berkeley two firms have about ten houses and all of these have been started in the last few years. The Japs have not as yet turned their attention to roses to any great extent but we expect to see them interested in this branch of the business in another year or two. G.

Arbitrary quotations at this season are impossible. The best one can do is to try and strike an average, leaving a reasonable margin on each side for special shortages or floods. Just at present the flood is like Noah's and about covers everything in sight. Some "cleanings up" were made last week that would justify the blush of the rose, while 'mums and carnations were unloaded in large lots at prices it would be a shame to mention.

In his work on "The Colors of Flowers," Charles Grant Allen says that all flowers, it would seem, were in their earliest form yellow; then some of them became white; after that, a few of them grew to be red or purple; and finally, a comparatively small number acquired various shades of lilac, mauve, violet, or blue. As a general rule the least developed flowers are yellow or white; those which have undergone a little more modification are usually pink or red; and those which have been most highly specialized of any are usually purple, lilac, or blue. Absolute deep ultramarine probably marks the highest level of al-

Show Preparations.

A trip around to the different growers shows up some very fine stock, and it looks as though the standard in the various lines is going to be high this season. Of course just at present the main topic is the 'mum show, and never before was the interest so strong as this year. There will be some good stock from the local growers to divide the premiums with those from other cities and states. Mr. Bertermann is anxious to receive, especially, the entries in the larger classes as early as possible, so he can arrange to make room for all before anything is unpacked. He is anxious to avoid as much as possible the customary confusion on the day of staging, as he will have his hands full enough anyway. Through an error class 13 in section 3 was changed in the final premium list, and it should read 25 single-stem plants, any other color, one variety. There is also an extra class added for not less than 500 double violets, for which is offered a first of $7 and a second of $5. The newspapers are lending a willing hand in getting up enthusiasm among the people. Last Saturday there was a half page in the News devoted to the Smith & Young greenhouses and their great success with violets. The Saturday before it gave Mrs. Vesey and Mr. Hasselman each a half page. In fact, everybody seems to be helping and everything is being done to make this show the best we have ever had.

With the Growers.

Henry Rieman has some fine chrysanthemum seedlings which he sits up nights to see unfold their petals. I have an idea that he is after those two S. A. F. medals. His roses and cyclamens and Lorraines are all in tip-top shape, and so are his carnations for being planted quite late. A banana tree in fruit has set his end of town agog lately.

At Bertermann's you can find almost any kind of plant you want to see growing, except roses. A house of A. Farleyense was in fine shape at the time of my visit. N. Piersoni is here in specimens as well as in smaller sizes. Their 'mums are fine this year. A house of poinsettias is in fine shape, too. One new house was added this summer, and a new boiler.

At A. Wiegand & Son's everything is hustle and bustle, with decorations for one thing or another. Their houses are filled with a fine lot of stock of all kinds, especially palms and specimen ferns. A fine new house was built in place of a pit, which gives them much more room.

John Hartje has decided to disseminate his fine white carnation Moonlight this spring. This is a fine sort and ought to have a good sale. His place looks good all through.

E. A. Nelson was a little late in getting planted up, but the plants are taking hold nicely and a good crop will soon be on. He has been busy fighting mildew on his roses lately, but says he has it down now. He has an improved Nelson which he thinks is a comer.

A. Pahud raises bouquets by the thousand; I mean stuff to make bouquets out of. Being right at the cemetery entrance, on bright days it keeps him busy.

Baur & Smith's carnations are in fine shape, as usual. Their Indianapolis is proving up to all their claims for it, and it is having a good sale. They expect to show it extensively this winter. Their 'mums are fine; some grand Appleton are just opening up and Eaton promises to show some great blooms. They have a big lot of cyclamens and all in good shape.

I understand there is some fine stock over on the south side and I hope to visit those parts soon. J. Heidenreich and E. Huckriede & Son are said to have some fine specimen chrysanthemum plants.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

We are all looking for a good frost to take the outdoor stock out of the way and make business what it should be. There is considerable funeral work, and a wedding now and then, but other trade is very poor. Cut flowers of all kinds are very plentiful.

R. H. Woodhouse has been giving an exhibition of chrysanthemums in an up-town store.

The October meeting of the Florists' Club was held at the greenhouses of R. E. Nofftz, and Mrs. Nofftz served a German lunch that was much appreciated. Mr. Nofftz gave a very interesting account of the things he saw on his trip abroad this summer, but some of the boys were a little incredulous about the flea stories. The next meeting will be with W. L. G. Brown, November 12, so chalk the date down and don't forget to be there.

S. J. Donaghy has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his son, James, who was a great help to his father, taking almost the entire charge of the greenhouses.

Otto Sucher, formerly with R. H. Woodhouse, has taken charge of S. S. Peckham's Fairhaven greenhouses.

E. H. Chamberlin and wife spent a few days last week in New York.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

At one time La Rose Gardens was the most extensive greenhouse plant in Memphis, and was justly noted for the famous roses produced. Through the death of the owner, the late J. T. Williamson, this plant has been purchased by the Memphis Floral Company. The greenhouse structures have been transplanted and added to those of the Memphis Floral Company at the south gate of Elmwood. The immense glass houses are now filled with first blooms of plants grown for winter forcing; 60,000 square feet of glass comprised the La Rose Gardens, and this, added to that formerly cultivated by the Memphis Floral Company, makes a total of 130,000 square feet of glass that this company controls. The chrysanthemums are just now coming into bloom. The Memphis Floral Company has a city store at 391 Main street, where a small chrysanthemum exhibit will be on for the next six weeks. In conversation with C. H. Hune, the president of the Memphis Floral Company, he advanced the idea that the florist business was the surest index to the metropolitan nature of Memphis. The demand for flowers and plants is on a steady increase, the public demanding high-class flowers and service, thus making possible the enormous outlay this company has gone to during the past twelve months.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade in Toronto during October, according to reports from different dealers, has been as good as, if not ahead of, last year. This may be owing to the exceptionally brisk run that business took during the fore part of the month. Since the 15th demand has fallen away and stock has accumulated very rapidly. Monday saw a considerable change in weather and we were treated in the morning to a real Canadian snowstorm. This we presume will have a tendency to shorten the supply and will give both wholesale and retail men a chance to clean up.

Carnations are coming in very plentifully and some really fine Lawson, Queen Louise, Enchantress and other good varieties are to be seen.

Notes.

The last two years our Toronto growers have been at liberty to talk about their stock, as there has been no chrysanthemum show to put them to a test. This year, however, the Horticultural Association is holding a show in St. George's hall, so we do not hear so much, but expect to see something above the average when the exhibits are staged. D. J.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

A cold wave that passed over this city Friday and Saturday caused a heavy frost and formed ice on small puddles of water. It finished the season for dahlias and cosmos, and most of the florists will be pleased to see the last of them, as it has been the finest season for all outdoor flowers we have had for many years. At times these flowers have been too plentiful for any good use. 'Mums are in full swing and have the demand over roses and carnations, which are hard to move at regular prices. Good 'mums can be had at prices ranging from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen. Carnations are $1 to $2 per 100; roses $1 to $4 per 100.

The coal question is not bothering the florists near as much as it was last year, and the dealers are quoting season delivery at greatly reduced rates. E.

KIND WORDS NEVER DIE.

Bellevue, Pa.
Chas. T. Siebert:—Please book my order for 100 lbs. of Zinc Never Rust Glazing Points. I have used five different kinds in the past 12 years, and none of them gave me satisfaction like yours. They will stay in, are easy to drive, no rights or lefts, will hold the glass in place, and do not rust away like all others I have used. Your Zinc Points are easy to take out when making repairs. I have used about 100 lbs. of your Zinc Points in the last two years, and am perfectly satisfied with them.

Yours truly,

F. BURKI.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Chas. T. Siebert:—In our 25 years' experience with glazing points of all kinds, I can say your zinc points are the best to date.

CHAS. H. WILSON,
Mgr. for Grant-Wilson Floral Co.

Lockland, Ohio.

Chas. T. Siebert:—I must say the Zinc Points have given great satisfaction. I have over 100 lbs. on my houses, and feel justified in stating that they are the best point on the market.

Yours respectfully,

W. K. PARTRIDGE, Florist.

Richmond, Ind.

Chas. T. Siebert:—Send us another lot of your $\frac{3}{4}$ Zinc Points. We have found them first-class.
The best thing we have ever used yet for glazing purposes.

Yours truly,

The E. G. HILL CO., Wholesale Florists.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Charles T. Siebert:—I can truthfully say your Zinc Points are the best I ever used. They are easily driven and withdrawn and are stiff. Being straight on one side they can be driven accurately; consequently the breakage of glass is very small. I have some in use four years and they are still in their place as good as new.

W. S. ROEBECK.

Springfield, Ohio.

Chas. T. Siebert:—You no doubt know by the 229 lbs. of Zinc Points we have ordered from you that we consider them the best on the market. We have four new houses under way, each 255 feet in length, and will soon have to place our order with you for quite a lot of more glazing points. We are, very truly,

OSSINING, N. Y.
I have used your FUMIGATING POWDER for some years and I have always found it first-class; there is no danger of it killing anything except the green fly, which it does with dispatch. I never use anything else for insecticide, nor do I wish anything better.
Yours truly,
C. BARSON.

BATH, ME.
We use your Fumigating Powder and we are never troubled with aphids; it does not harm the blooms in the least, and we find it the cheapest way to fumigate—and we have tried everything that is on the market.

Yours truly,
JOHN H. RAMSEY & CO.

NORTHAMPTON INSANE HOSPITAL, MASS.
After using your Fumigating Powder I must say that in fifteen years' experience with various methods of killing aphids, I find this the most effectual and economical method I have yet tried.

Yours respectfully,
GEORGE W. THORNILY.

BAYSIDE, N. Y.
I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.

Yours truly,
WM. BELL.

We will mail at your request our booklet telling about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. We guarantee satisfaction or money back. Free trial bags for the asking. THE H. A. STOOHOFF CO., Tobacco Powder Hobbyists, 118 West St., New York.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business continues much the same as last week. There is a good supply of stock, but the wholesale houses are usually sold out by noon. Funeral work has used large quantities of short-stemmed flowers. There was a killing frost on Friday night, and the effect is felt in the upward tendency of prices. There is a fairly large supply of 'mums, but the A1 stock is limited and much sought after by the trade. Fancy goods bring 20 cents, but that is about highwater mark so far. Some first-class Robinson grown by B. P. Critchell sell at sight. Good pink and yellow are still scarce, and it will be a week before the demand will be supplied. Medium and small 'mums also find ready buyers.

Roses are not quite so abundant, and they are selling at higher figures. The best stock in Brides, Maids, Gates, etc., brings $6. Brides, if anything, are hardly equal to the demand, but short-stemmed Maids are in oversupply. Liberty, Meteor and Beauties are scarce. Carnations are much the same as last week, but they are keeping much better. Violets are doing better this year than usual. Good stock now brings 75 cents per 100, with Princess of Wales at $1. Some very good smilax is to be had, but Sprengeri is scarce.

Notes.

The first exhibition of the Cincinnati Florists' Society will be held in the club room on Saturday, November 14. It will be devoted exclusively to chrysanthemums, the following prizes being offered: Vases of white, pink and yellow 'mums, 12 blooms each, first, $6; second, $4; third, $3. Best vase Bonnaillon, 25 blooms, first, $10; second, $8; third, $6. Best general display, $10. The society's certificate of merit will be awarded to all novelties and seedlings judged worthy of same. Growers will please ship all exhibits prepaid, care Superintendent Jabez Elliott Flower Market, and the society will look after staging. A good show is looked forward to, as the trustees are making special efforts to make it a success.

Peerless Glazing Point

has common sense features of practical value that appeal to practical florists and are possessed by no other point. The only double point with BOTH BEVELS ON SAME SIDE.

A point made on any other principle will twist in driving and cramp or crack the glass. Dreer's Peerless Glazing Points will never work out. Drives true and holds firmly by one blow of hammer or chisel. May be easily removed and used again in case of re-glazing. 1000 sufficient for 500 lights. Box of 1000 points 75c, postpaid. 5000 points by express for $2.75.

DRAPERY STUDIES.

II—Climbing.

Climbing drapery should be more used. Nature furnishes many examples of this style, as the majority of vines aspire to climb. Their methods and habits form interesting studies for the subject in hand. How a Virginia creeper begins the ascent of a tree trunk can be seen without two eyes. It sends some long shoots nearly straight up, others circle around, and still others steer a midway course, somewhat like the sketch reproduced herewith. How like a tree trunk a pillar is! How like the creeper on the tree is our garland on the pillar!

For a variety in this style of drapery study the climbing habits of clematis, wistaria, madeira and other vines, common or uncommon, the more the better. Distinguish between the contours formed by the general outlines of the plants. A knowledge of as many different forms of plant life as possible should be acquired, and a little sketch book kept for rough drafts. By this means of observation and recording different types of natural form will be impressed on the mind for future use as occasion requires. Here and there they will fit into nooks and corners, panels, arches, etc., astonishingly easily.

Greenhouse smilax, as it is ordinarily cultivated, has no character as a climber. Therefore it is virgin material in our hands, and will be most commonly used in this series for illustrations.

A panel of smilax nearly solid can be made like a clematis vine or like a brick, according to the admixture of "grey matter" or its absence. After laying in the solid part, get some sprays separated from the main body, run them out in different directions, loosen a few from the top, and let the whole plan begin to smack of the clematis flavor. It will if it has half a chance.

A wistaria when trained on a flat surface spreads far out at the top, tree like. Try this scheme for a wall piece, and if there are pictures or window frames, or doors within reach, extend the upper sprays loosely and gracefully over them and down a short distance. A Crimson Rambler will present a similar outline except that its sprays extend more generally upward than outward. A hop vine often climbs over itself, and these intertwined branches when pulled apart form a very pretty design for climbing drapery.

During the season when any of the outdoor vines can be cut from the ground or greenhouse the whole plant can be cut, and if properly soaked will last a day or two after being put up for decorations.

ROSES.

Importance of Ventilation.

The excellent weather we have had during the past few weeks should have put roses into fine condition for winter, as there was every opportunity to give ample ventilation, both night and day, which, if properly attended to, would conduce to the production of hard foliage of good substance, a most essential feature to start the winter with.

Year after year complaints arrive from the less experienced, and sometimes from those who have been long enough at the business to be classed as experts, about the poor quality of stem and foliage. This arises, in great measure from ignorance or carelessness of the laws of ventilation, especially as applied after fall firing begins. So soon as it is necessary to use heat they seem to be afraid to ventilate. Whether it is with the object of conserving the heat or that they are afraid of the plants getting cold it is hard to say, but a usual practice is to

The subject of ventilation is of so much importance, especially at this season, and seems to be so little understood by some of the younger growers, that a few words on the theory and practice as countenanced by experts may be of some value. When we bear in mind that the rose is neither a tropical nor greenhouse plant, but is truly a native of temperate climes, we will see the necessity of giving it a free and ample supply of fresh air when we confine it to the greenhouse, as it is only there for the reason that we wish to change its season of blooming. If we intend it to do good work we must attend strictly to its wants, which by this course of treatment we have debarred nature from fulfilling. And one of these principal wants is a constant supply of pure, fresh air, heated to a temperature which as near as possible approaches the natural temperature.

To accomplish this we have ventilators of the most approved patterns and suitable heating apparatus and only require the knowledge and practice of manipulating these in a common-sense way to induce the suitable conditions.

As practiced by experts ventilation consists of gradually raising the ventilators in the morning as the day warms. Thus, if the thermometer shows at 7:30 or 8 o'clock a temperature of 60 to 62 degrees and indicating a tendency to rise, the ventilators should be raised just so much as to allow it to remain at that figure without falling below it. After an interval of half an hour or so it will be found a few degrees higher, when close the ventilators at nightfall and keep them closed till the sun heat compels them to be opened. The consequence of such a practice is a crop of soft, flabby foliage, which is caused by stagnant air and condensed moisture. This, if allowed to happen frequently or to continue for any length, will so enervate the whole plant that it becomes very susceptible to trouble and certainly suffers when first exposed to fresh air.

they should be raised a little again, but never so that the temperature will drop. When reducing air during the afternoon the same care must be used, so that after lowering the ventilators the temperature should not rise above the mark indicated.

Regarding night ventilation, when the weather is mild, four or five inches will not be too much, and even when the weather is cold a small crack is essential to ensure good air circulation.

By rigidly adhering to this practice we have better foliage and stem and the blooms will be of superior size and quality, the percentage of bullheads and malformed buds will be much less and the keeping qualities of the blooms will be enhanced, while the health and vigor of the plant, enabling it to successfully cope with troubles and disease, will amply repay the extra fuel used. CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Handling the Product.

After having given your plants every attention they demand and your efforts begin to show that good returns are in sight, it is well to consider the means whereby the finished product can be put before the buyer in the best possible condition, not only in appearance, but also in lasting qualities.

Intelligent packing has everything to do with appearance of what was first-class stock when packed. Lasting qualities depend on time and manner of cutting, condition of plant and bloom when cut, method of handling after cut and also on fertilizers employed in their production. The method of tying in bunches of twenty-five or more, while facilitating the work of putting up orders, has little to commend it, at least, when the prevailing manner of bunching is practiced. I could never see the sense of winding a string numerous times around the stems for two-thirds their length. It not only invites damage to the blooms by crowding them into a solid mass, but the foliage is also injured and rendered unsightly.

It would seem more in keeping with the object for which these smiles of nature are intended if some skill were displayed in arranging these bunches for packing. As the item of expense must be considered, I know circumstances demand that certain grades be handled in this way, but I would put no more than twenty-five in a bunch and proceed as follows:

Remove the foliage for a distance of about four inches from the end of the stems; two turns of raffia an inch or so from the base of the bunch; tie moderately firm. This will allow the blooms to be spread out in a fan-shape when packed, the advantage of which is obvious.

With high grade stock it is economy to pack each bloom singly, using shallow boxes of sufficient length to allow the heads to occupy both ends, the space in the center, containing the stems, being filled in a manner to prevent shucking. Rolls made of extra grade excelsior wrapped with wax tissue should be put under the calyxes to prevent injury to the petals. Tissue paper will also be needed between layers and over stems where they would come in contact with blooms. These boxes can be of heavy cardboard and several crated or boxed together for shipment, or of light wood designed to be strapped or tied together, the remaining feature being to provide against damage by frost.

The subject of keeping qualities will be taken up next week.

SALT FOR CARNATIONS.

In Mr. Baur's notes in the REVIEW of October 8 he says: "Spraying the plants overhead with salt water will help to stiffen the stems a little." The writer remembers when he was a boy his father sowed salt on wheat in the spring to stiffen the straw and prevent it falling before ripening, when on strong land. Acting on this principle, I have found it has the same effect on carnations. It not only stiffens the stems, but as it makes the grains of wheat larger and more plump, so it improves the quality and color of the carnation bloom.

I use a good handful of salt to two rows across a five-foot bench and water it in well, and repeat the dose in three or four weeks. After a few days you will notice the plants taking on that beautiful blue color we all so much delight to see. These two doses I have found to be sufficient until the weather gets bright again, toward spring, when the operation can be repeated.

Our soil is a limestone, as we are in the blue grass region, and while it acts finely here, it might not produce the same results in different soil, so it might be well to experiment a little before using much salt. I hope Mr. Baur will try the salt, and some time during the winter, or as soon as he can, give the trade the benefit of his experiment. I always delight to read his notes in the REVIEW because they are so full of that best of ingredients, common sense. S. M. HARBISON.

C. S. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

Unless all signs fail, the exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America and the American Institute, at New York next week, November 10 to 12, will be all that its promoters have striven to make it, the greatest feast of chrysanthemums we have ever seen. The Herald Square Exhibition Hall is certainly the largest and best lighted hall in New York to-day. There is abundant space to display all the exhibits that may be brought, and under perfect daylight their merits can be seen to the best advantage, and true color values appreciated. It rests now with those who have the material to bring it to the show. Intending exhibitors who have not already done so will help the management materially by at once sending their entries to Dr. F. M. Hexamer, 52 Lafayette place, New York City. The regulations call for exhibits to be in position by noon of Tuesday, November 10, and judging will be commenced at 1 p. m. It is the intention to adhere strictly to these regulations, so that all judging may be completed and the awards made when the show opens to the general public at 3 p. m. Thoroughly competent judges have been selected by the executive committee of the C. S. A. There will be nine judges, working in groups of three, so there should be no undue delay in rendering decisions, except where unavoidable through closeness of competition demanding prolonged, careful deliberation.

A meeting of members of the C. S. A. will be held on the second day of the show, at 3 p. m. Anyone wishing to join the society can do so previous to this meeting by paying $1, and participate in the meeting. In addition to the regular business, there will be an important lecture on the diseases of the chrysanthemum, delivered by Professor George E. Stone, of the Hatch Experiment Station, Massachusetts Agricultural College. This should be a fertile theme for discussion, and cannot fail to be helpful to all growers.

A. HERRINGTON, Pres.

The preparations for the New York exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America are about completed. The show will open November 10 and flowers must be ready for judgment by noon of that day. The judging will be done by three committees of three each. These are gentlemen of national repute as chrysanthemum experts, and the work will be so divided as to facilitate judging.

The meetings of the society will be held on the same floor as the show, and members are requested to gather at 3 p. m., November 11, the second day of the show, for the convention. Matters of great importance to the members of the society will come up. The president's address will be of great interest to all the members.

Prof. Geo. E. Stone, of the Hatch Experiment Station of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, will lecture on "The Diseases of the Chrysanthemum."

This exhibition promises to be the greatest ever held in New York.

There were six varieties before the Chicago committee Saturday, October 24. The results of the committee's examination are as follows:

Mrs. H. W. Buckbee, exhibited by H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; pure white, center incurved, outer petals reflexed, Japanese; scored commercial scale, 91 points.

Rockford, by the same exhibitor, yellow, Japanese incurved; scored commercial scale, 88 points.

Cinna, exhibited by the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.; deep yellow, Chinese type; scored commercial scale, 85 points.

Lord Hopetoun, by the same exhibitor; color of Geo. W. Childs, Japanese; scored commercial scale, 87 points.

Ethel Fitzroy, by the same exhibitor, bronze and gold, Japanese; scored exhibition scale, 86 points.

Madam J. H. Perraud, by the same exhibitor; cream-colored Japanese; scored commercial scale, 80 points.

Andrew Morrison, gardener for Curwen Stoddart, Esq., Rydal, Pa., exhibited Seedling A before the Philadelphia committee. This variety is described as a light rose pink, reflexed Japanese; scored commercial scale 78 points, exhibition scale 83 points. In the committee's judgment, the flowers sent were past their best.

THE TWOMBLY ESTATE.

The enormous 1,400-acre estate of H. McK. Twombly, at Madison, N. J., is one of the triumphs of art over nature, and infinite patience and toil and unlimited wealth have made it a "garden of the gods." What will yet be accomplished under the able management of Arthur Herrington, it would be no easy thing to say. The possibilities are unlimited, and the work already accomplished compares favorably with any of the great landscape effects of America. The grand view from the eminence on which the palatial residence has been erected reminds one of Biltmore, and the mountains alone are lacking to bring vividly to ones memory the delightful experience at Asheville, while the artistic effects and the perfection of detail are far in advance of what has been accomplished there.

The great ranges of glass, conservatories and commercial departments, are the special domain of Mr. Herrington.

Space forbids more than passing mention of the multitude of interesting features that appeal to one on every hand. Such an array of chrysanthemums! See them at the November exhibition. Miss Alice Byron is a large, early white; R. Hooper Pearson, a rich yellow; Mrs. T. W. Pockett, resembling Golden Wedding; Omega, yellow; Mrs. Coombes, pink; Lilly Mountford, pink; Mrs. R. Darby, purplish amaranth; M. Verlot, pink; Henry Hurrell, rich yellow; Robert Halliday, yellow; H. J. Jones, deep crimson; Vivian-Morel, Mrs. Henry Robinson, Lady Harriet, Timothy Eaton, of remarkable growth; the Yellow Eaton, T. Carrington, Col. Appleton, Louis La Roux, a new pink, with great possibilities, and so on without limit.

Then there are the grape houses, with their luscious product; a ton each is their record and great bunches of Muscat of Alexandria still waiting to demonstrate their sweetness to the fortunate investigator.

There are nine great orchid houses, with an assortment unexcelled in America. Four houses are 170 feet in length, three 100 feet and two seventy feet, and all "full to the muzzle" with absolutely perfect plants. Cattleyas occupy a large part of the space, all the varieties of value being represented. The stock of C. Mendelli is said to be the largest in the world. There are several benches of Cypripedium Leeannum which will be in flower for Christmas. C. insigne and C. villosum are there in quantity, also a house of calanthes and a large block of Oncidium varicosum.

The system of watering the orchids is unique. Tracks have been laid through the houses, the plants are close to the roof and a platform is built, high enough to enable the help to reach them easily. Every house is a model of cleanliness and neatness.

Three houses of Farleyense are a striking feature of the fern department, the equal of which I have never seen.

The stock of immense azaleas, fifty of them, is the largest and finest in this country or Europe. The rhododendrons and acacias cannot be excelled in size and the great bays rise to a height of twenty feet on either side of the entrance to the mansion. Everything is in keeping with the immensity of the surroundings.

A grand winter storehouse 55x100 has been completed.

Mr. Herrington has a charming home close to the estate, and Mrs. Herrington and three lovely children unite in cordial greeting and welcome to the fortunate recipient of their genial hospitality.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

A TRIP TO RICHMOND.

I doubt if there is a town in the United States that has more in it to interest the average grower, and knowing this I ran over to Richmond on Saturday and spent Sunday and Monday, visiting the various greenhouse establishments in that quiet, beautiful little city.

Of course, the most interesting place just at present is that of the E. G. Hill Co., and I spent a full half day there, looking through the houses and chatting with the several members of the firm. The main drawing cards just at present naturally are the 'mums, and you can walk up and down and back again wondering how they grew such magnificent blooms. Surely, there has been great progress in the improvement of the chrysanthemum family in the past few years, especially in the size. There are lots of Col. Appleton and Eaton, and the yellow sport of the later variety, and they are magnificent blooms, as good as any. All the best of the recent introductions are grown in great shape, too, and among them are many varieties that should make desirable commercial varieties. Easy doers, clean foliage, good stems and blooms that will stand handling.

Perhaps the most interesting lot of all are the Australian varieties. It does look as though the growers down there had produced a new race of 'mums of exceptional size, and with all their size many of the varieties will make first-class commercial varieties. You have already read in the REVIEW about those grand sorts, Wm. Duckham and Cheltoni, and great they are, but there are many others that will become standard commercial sorts. Some of the colors are as good or better than any of the older sorts. From what I had heard about the Australian chrysanthemums I expected to see a lot of weak necks, without foliage, that would have to be tied up to a stake to hold them up, but in that I was very agreeably disappointed. The stems seem as strong as any of ours and in most cases the foliage is there, too, in plenty.

When we started in I pulled out my notebook, intending to write down the names of a few of the best ones, not only for my own use, but I meant to mention a few of the best ones in these notes. We came to one promising variety after another, each of which I felt sure we ought to add to our list of commercial varieties. No off colors nor freaks were put down, and in spite of my attempts to write down only a few of the best the list grew until I had just forty names down, running through every clear shade represented in the chrysanthemum family. We never found much sale for red 'mums, but there are several varieties that show a combination of red and gold that surely must make them sell, and they don't burn, either. You will see many of these varieties at the shows, but it will always pay you infinitely better to see them growing, if you have any idea of investing in some of them. I consider that the sight of the 'mum houses alone would have paid me well for my trip.

There are other things in plenty to interest the visitor, however, and not the least of these are Mr. Hill's new seedling roses. There are many that show great promise, and in fact, some of them have been tested enough to have proven that they will trot. Last year I mentioned a yellow rose that showed great promise and I saw it again, and am more convinced than ever of its worth. The color is a good, bright yellow, deeper than Deegen, and a much better bud than Perle. This variety is a fine grower and evidently much freer than Perle, too. There are a fine lot of reds that will easily discount Liberty in growth and productiveness, while the buds and the color are just as good, and in some cases, better. In pink there are also several fine ones that will likely find their way onto the market when sufficient stock has been worked up. There were some fine blooms, a new rose from Philadelphia named Ideal, which looks like a good rose. The color is fine.

The carnation houses were as interesting to me as anything on the place, and the stock in them is in good shape. Those of you who are swearing at Adonis ought to go and look at their house of that variety. You would stop swearing at it forthwith and resolve to find out its wants and treat it right. Enchantress is proving to be all that was claimed for it. Prosperity is doing better than I have ever seen it do so early in the season. Lillian Pond is making a fine growth, but it is not proving so early as I expected. Gov. Wolcott shows up nicely. Floriana is doing finely and so is Harlowarden. Innocence wants a little more cool weather, but is coming in nice shape. Mrs. Lawson and White Bradt are also doing finely. Lady Bountiful, The Bell and Indianapolis are on trial and are showing up nicely. There are houses and houses of young roses, geraniums, palms and ferns, and all kinds of other stock all in fine shape, and prospects are good for a great season of business. I must add, however, that Piersoni looks fine, and those planted on the bench are making runners as fast as I have ever seen Bostoniensis make them.

Over at E. T. Grave's place you can see some fine carnations and roses. They have dropped 'mums altogether this year. A couple of large 200-foot houses planted to Bride, Maid, Sunrise, and Liberty, are in fine shape. Among their carnations their own President McKinley promises as good as any. Enchantress is doing fine, and so is their Elsie Martin. A half bench of Ethel Crocker is making some grand blooms. Fair Maid is making good blooms, and lots of them. Gov. Wolcott is doing well here, too. They have a sport from Liberty rose that looks like a winner.

At the B. K. & B. Co.'s place I found all three of the firm and as fine a lot of carnations as I have ever seen at this time of the year. The house which they point to with just pride is planted with their new Richmond Gem. For a commercial scarlet this is hard to beat, although it is not so large as many of the newer ones. There are two beds 200 feet long, and they are a perfect sea of buds. This will prove a breadwinner, I think. The Queen is so well thought of here that the plants have been topped back to make them produce cuttings. Enchantress is fine and Gov. Wolcott is producing some fine blooms, as are also Harry Fenn, President McKinley, Floriana, Dorothy and Mrs. Lawson. A few plants of Indianapolis are doing fine, and it is considered good enough that I noticed a half dozen seed pods on it already. A house of early 'mums was nearly all cut out, but some fine Appleton still remain.

At G. R. Gause's I found things in nice shape, some good 'mums just opening up and a nice lot of general retail stock.

The Fulle boys were rushed with trade on account of All Saints' day. I walked through the houses, though, and found things looking prosperous. They rebuilt all of their houses this summer and last, and they have a nice place now.

At Chessmann & Shepman's I also found all hands busy with design work, etc. This place is in much better shape than I have ever seen it. All the stock looks in fine shape, and a good season is ahead. Some fine blooms of Marie Liger were being cut. Their carnations are in nice shape, too. This firm does a large general retail business.

NARCISSI IN WASHINGTON.

Please give me some pointers on growing the Paper White narcissus. They fail to bloom satisfactorily after the first year, imported from France or California. Have tried lifting the bulbs in July and August and planting again in November, and have tried leaving them in, as we have other narcissi, and still no blooms. In the latter case the bloom buds appeared by January 1 and were killed by the first cold days. The bulbs grown here are very much larger than when imported. The narcissus family, with this exception, is very much at home here and blooms last in the field six weeks.

WASH.

I would rather this communication had been sent to some one more up on the narcissus and for another reason. This inquirer and I have had frequent correspondence on the subject of bulb growing in the state of Washington. My few remarks, erroneous as they may be, will, I trust, bring out some light and expert opinion from some other of your many readers. Many of us have seen the bulbs of hyacinths, tulips, narcissi, candidum and longiflorum lilies, wonderful in size, grown in the wonderful soil and fine climate of Washington. The exhibit of these bulbs at Omaha was extraordinary.

Last fall I received from Washington a bulb of Lilium candidum. It was fully six inches in diameter. I grew it in an 8-inch pot and this spring it threw up three strong flower stems, each one as strong and with as many flowers as the average single stems we used to get in the old days when this was an important Easter flower. I have not seen bulbs of the longiflorum lilies, but hear that they make as fine bulbs. The hyacinths, tulips, Von Sion narcissi, and some other bulbs which I don't recall, were, if not twice as large in size, fully twice as heavy as bulbs of the same varieties imported from Holland. The Dutchman says, "Oh, yes! You have size, big bulb, but you get not so fine a flower." Whether that is correct or not I can't say. At Asheville Ex-President William R. Smith read a very interesting paper on bulb culture in the United States and the probability of our being able to produce here what we need, instead of importing. I recalled at the conclusion of the paper the exhibit of the Washington bulbs at Omaha, and then added that if they could not be grown nearer to us than the Pacific slope, they would be of little use to us, as the freight charge across the continent would make them cost more to us than the Holland bulbs, duty included, such is the cheapness of ocean freight and such is a sample of how our great railroads have us. Mr. Smith looked down at me in a fatherly way, as becomes an old gentleman to a young one, and said: "You spoke the very truth."

But now to the narcissi. The native clime of the Paper White I don't know. It is a very different bulb from the true narcissus of which we can take Von Sion as a type. They are perfectly hardy; Paper Whites are not. Some very beautiful narcissi are found growing in Ireland, something akin to the climate of Washington, except perhaps the latter may have a little more sunshine. We are told, and know by experience, that the Paper White narcissus should not be exposed to frost at any time of its existence. For commerce it is, I believe, grown in the south of France. At least that is where our bulbs come from. The beds may be protected in winter if any protection is needed. An early, warm spring brings them in flower by March, perhaps before, and they must either naturally or by some means ripen their bulbs quite early, as they arrive in this country in early August. Now, I think the trouble with the Paper White in Washington is that they do not ripen their bulbs sufficiently well. The rich, virgin soil of great depth and the mild, moist atmosphere keeps them too long green and growing. This is only an idea; I may be entirely wrong, yet I believe that is the trouble.

After the right state is located and the suitable soil is found, there is a great deal to be learned about bulb growing, ripening, harvesting and storing. I once asked Mr. Van Skazaldinkerpool to tell me something of the modus operandi of digging and storing his bulbs. In the first place, they are not dug at all, but lifted out of the ground with hands and fingers. The many different times they were turned in the shelves, cleaned, sorted, etc., completely bewildered me and at the seventeenth sorting we adjourned for a year. The coming spring the operations will be concluded, or rather the narrative.

I am not one who thinks it very necessary that we produce everything we eat, smoke or cover ourselves with, any more than we should produce all our own literature. What other nations can produce better and finer than we, let us have the blessings of, and unless we need the revenue very badly, let us have it without a tax. A prohibitive tariff allows our own manufacturers to pass off any shoddy article or fictitious price on us. A low tariff, or none, on many articles would be an incentive to them to give us a genuine article, equal or better than the foreign, or lose their trade. But that they would never do, for many things they sell in a foreign market at twenty-five per cent less than we can buy it in the land where it is produced. With all that, in this broad and blessed land, with semi-tropics on the south, a frigid climate on the north, with every variety of soil and clime, there must be some spots, perhaps many, where our hyacinths, tulips, narcissi and lilies can be grown equal to Holland or any other place, and here is a field for the floricultural section of our Agricultural Department to get in some good work. It has done lots for the farmer; something is due us.

Appleton and Eaton, and the yellow sport of the later variety, and they are magnificent blooms, as good as any. All the best of the recent introductions are grown in great shape, too, and among them are many varieties that should make desirable commercial varieties. Easy doers, clean foliage, good stems and blooms that will stand handling.

Perhaps the most interesting lot of all are the Australian varieties. It does look as though the growers down there had produced a new race of 'mums of exceptional size, and with all their size many of the varieties will make first-class commercial varieties. You have already read in the REVIEW about those grand sorts, Wm. Duckham and Cheltoni, and great they are, but there are many others that will become standard commercial sorts. Some of the colors are as good or better than any of the older sorts. From what I had heard about the Australian chrysanthemums I expected to see a lot of weak necks, without foliage, that would have to be tied up to a stake to hold them up, but in that I was very agreeably disappointed. The stems seem as strong as any of ours and in most cases the foliage is there, too, in plenty.

When we started in I pulled out my notebook, intending to write down the names of a few of the best ones, not only for my own use, but I meant to mention a few of the best ones in these notes. We came to one promising variety after another, each of which I felt sure we ought to add to our list of commercial varieties. No off colors nor freaks were put down, and in spite of my attempts to write down only a few of the best the list grew until I had just forty names down, running through every clear shade represented in the chrysanthemum family. We never found much sale for red 'mums, but there are several varieties that show a combination of red and gold that surely must make them sell, and they don't burn, either. You will see many of these varieties at the shows, but it will always pay you infinitely better to see them growing, if you have any idea of investing in some of them. I consider that the sight of the 'mum houses alone would have paid me well for my trip.

There are other things in plenty to interest the visitor, however, and not the least of these are Mr. Hill's new seedling roses. There are many that show great promise, and in fact, some of them have been tested enough to have proven that they will trot. Last year I mentioned a yellow rose that showed great promise and I saw it again, and am more convinced than ever of its worth. The color is a good, bright yellow, deeper than Deegen, and a much better bud than Perle. This variety is a fine grower and evidently much freer than Perle, too. There are a fine lot of reds that will easily discount Liberty in growth and productiveness, while the buds and the color are just as good, and in some cases, better. In pink there are also several fine ones that will likely find their way onto the market when sufficient stock has been worked up. There were some fine blooms, a new rose from Philadelphia named Ideal, which looks like a good rose. The color is fine.

The carnation houses were as interesting to me as anything on the place, and the stock in them is in good shape. Those of you who are swearing at Adonis ought to go and look at their house of that variety. You would stop swearing at it forthwith and resolve to find out its wants and treat it right. Enchantress is proving to be all that was claimed for it. Prosperity is doing better than I have ever seen it do so early in the season. Lillian Pond is making a fine growth, but it is not proving so early as I expected. Gov. Wolcott shows up nicely. Floriana is doing finely, and so is Harlowarden. Innocence wants a little more cool weather, but is coming in nice shape. Mrs. Lawson and White Bradt are also doing finely. Lady Bountiful, The Bell and Indianapolis are on trial and are showing up nicely. There are houses of young roses, geraniums, palm and ferns, and all kinds of other stock all in fine shape, and prospects are good for a great season of business. I must add, however, that Piersoni looks fine and those planted on the bench are making runners as fast as I have ever seen Bostoniensis make them.

Over at E. T. Grave's place you can see some fine carnations and roses. They have dropped 'mums altogether this year. A couple of large 200-foot houses planted to Bride, Maid, Sunrise, and Liberty, are in fine shape. Among their carnations their own President McKinley promises as good as any. Enchantress is doing fine, and so is their Elsie Martin. A half bench of Ethel Crocker is making some grand blooms. Fair Maid is making good blooms, and lots of them. Gov. Wolcott is doing well here, too. They have a sport from Liberty rose that looks like a winner.

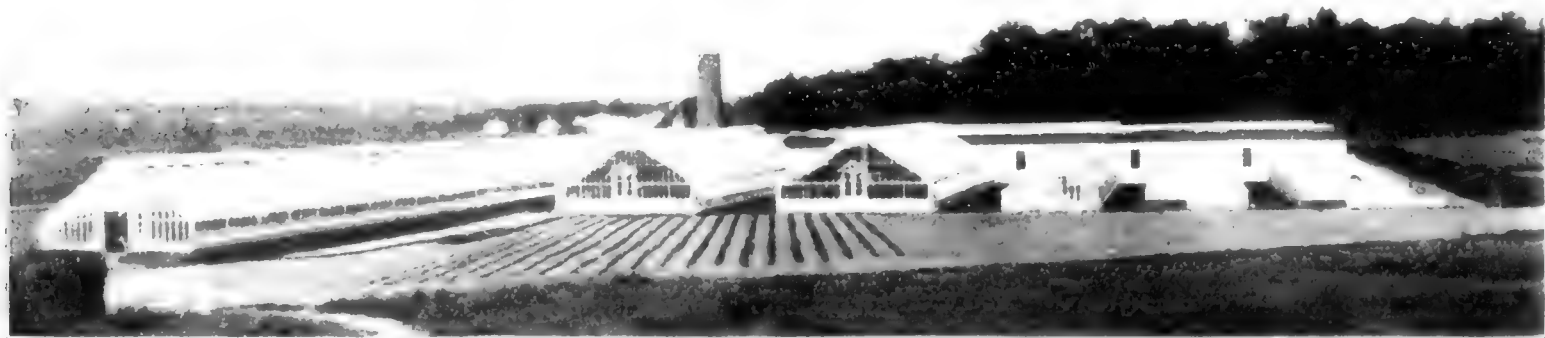

At the B. K. & B. Co.'s place I found all three of the firm and as fine a lot of carnations as I have ever seen at this time of the year. The house which they point to with just pride is planted with their new Richmond Gem. For a commercial scarlet this is hard to beat, although it is not so large as many of the newer ones. There are two beds 200 feet long, and they are a perfect sea of buds. This will prove a breadwinner, I think. The Queen is so well thought of here that the plants have been topped back to make them produce cuttings. Enchantress is fine and Gov. Wolcott is producing some fine blooms, as are also Harry Fenn, President McKinley, Floriana, Dorothy and Mrs. Lawson. A few plants of Indianapolis are doing fine, and it is considered good enough that I noticed a half dozen seed pods on it already. A house of early 'mums was nearly all cut out, but some fine Appleton still remain.

At G. R. Gause's I found things in nice shape, some good 'mums just opening up and a nice lot of general retail stock.

The Fulle boys were rushed with trade on account of All Saints' day. I walked through the houses, though, and found things looking prosperous. They rebuilt all of their houses this summer and last, and they have a nice place now.

At Chessman & Shepman's I also found all hands busy with design work, etc. This place is in much better shape than I have ever seen it. All the stock looks in fine shape, and a good season is ahead. Some fine blooms of Marie Lager were being cut. Their carnations are in nice shape, too. This firm does a large general retail business.

NARCISSI IN WASHINGTON.

Please give me some pointers on growing the Paper White narcissus. They fail to bloom satisfactorily after the first year, imported from France or California. Have tried lifting the bulbs in July and August and planting again in November, and have tried leaving them in, as we have other narcissi, and still no blooms. In the latter case the blooms appeared by January 1 and were killed by the first cold days. The bulbs grown here are very much larger than when imported. The narcissus family, with this exception, is very much at home here and blooms last in the field six weeks.

WASH.

I would rather this communication had been sent to some one more up on the narcissus and for another reason. This inquirer and I have had frequent correspondence on the subject of bulb growing in the state of Washington. My few remarks, erroneous as they may be, will, I trust, bring out some light and expert opinion from some other of your many readers. Many of us have seen the bulbs of hyacinths, tulips, narcissi, candidum and longiflorum lilies, wonderful in size, grown in the wonderful soil and fine climate of Washington. The exhibit of these bulbs at Omaha was extraordinary.

Last fall I received from Washington a bulb of Lilium candidum. It was fully six inches in diameter. I grew it in an 8-inch pot and this spring it threw up three strong flower stems, each one as strong and with as many flowers as the average single stems we used to get in the old days when this was an important Easter flower. I have not seen bulbs of the longiflorum lilies, but hear that they make as fine bulbs. The hyacinths, tulips, Von Sion narcissi, and some other bulbs which I don't recall, were, if not twice as large in size, fully twice as heavy as bulbs of the same varieties imported from Holland. The Dutchman says, "Oh, yes! You have size, big bulb, but you get not so fine a flower." Whether that is correct or not I can't say. At Asheville Ex-President William R. Smith read a very interesting paper on bulb culture in the United States and the probability of our being able to produce here what we need, instead of importing. I recalled at the conclusion of the paper the exhibit of the Washington bulbs at Omaha, and then added that if they could not be grown nearer to us than the Pacific slope, they would be of little use to us, as the freight charge across the continent would make them cost more to us than the Holland bulbs, duty included, such is the cheapness of ocean freight and such is a sample of how our great railroads have us. Mr. Smith looked down at me in a fatherly way, as becomes an old gentleman to a young one, and said: "You spoke the very truth."

But now to the narcissi. The native name of the Paper White I don't know. This is a very different bulb from the true narcissus of which we can take Von Sion as a type. They are perfectly hardy; Paper Whites are not. Some very beautiful narcissi are found growing in Ireland, something akin to the climate of Washington, except perhaps the latter may have a little more sunshine. We are told, and know by experience, that the Paper White narcissus should not be exposed to frost at any time of its existence. For commerce it is, I believe, grown in the south of France. At least that is where our bulbs come from. The beds may be protected in winter if any protection is needed. An early, warm spring brings them in flower by March, perhaps before, and they must either naturally or by some means ripen their bulbs quite early, as they arrive in this country in early August. Now, I think the trouble with the Paper White in Washington is that they do not ripen their bulbs sufficiently well. The rich, virgin soil of great depth and the mild, moist atmosphere keeps them too long green and growing. This is only an idea; I may be entirely wrong, yet I believe that is the trouble.

After the right state is located and the suitable soil is found, there is a great deal to be learned about bulb growing, ripening, harvesting and storing. I once asked Mr. Van Skazaldinkerpool to tell me something of the modus operandi of digging and storing his bulbs. In the first place, they are not dug at all, but lifted out of the ground with hands and fingers. The many different times they were turned in the shelves, cleaned, sorted, etc., completely bewildered me and at the seventeenth sorting we adjourned for a year. The coming spring the operations will be concluded, or rather the narrative.

I am not one who thinks it very necessary that we produce everything we eat, smoke or cover ourselves with, any more than we should produce all our own literature. What other nations can produce better and finer than we, let us have the blessings of, and unless we need the revenue very badly, let us have it without a tax. A prohibitive tariff allows our own manufacturers to pass off any shoddy article or fictitious price on us. A low tariff, or none, on many articles would be an incentive to them to give us a genuine article, equal or better than the foreign, or lose their trade. But that they would never do, for many things they sell in a foreign market at twenty-five per cent less than we can buy it in the land where it is produced. With all that, in this broad and blessed land, with semi-tropics on the south, a frigid climate on the north, with every variety of soil and climate, there must be some spots, perhaps many, where our hyacinths, tulips, narcissi and lilies can be grown equal to Holland or any other place, and here is a field for the floricultural section of our Agricultural Department to get in some good work. It has done lots for the farmer; something is due us.

PRACTICES OF PLANTSMEN.

We have received a letter from the foreman for a well-known florist in New York who calls attention to certain unprofitable practices which, while their very unprofitableness make them, we believe, seldom encountered, yet are worth occasional reference, for complete satisfaction is at the bottom of all profitable business. The writer says, in part, as follows:

The writer has purchased small plants, mostly from 2 to 2½-inch pots, aggregating from $7,000 to $10,000 yearly for the past four years, and I can say that at least three-fourths of this amount went to advertisers in your paper. There are many advertisers with whom we have dealt for many years, simply because their stock is satisfactory, the packing done properly, the boxes light, yet strong enough to travel without being smashed.

There is, however, much to learn in every branch of our great trade. When the advertiser states that the plants are from 2 or 2½-inch pots, we naturally think that these plants had been potted for some time and are well established. But this is not always the case, and it is not only that such fresh-potted plants are always in poor condition to ship, but poor packing is also done. Some will give them a hard soaking just before packing, and squeeze the soil so hard it is impossible to break the ball without breaking all the tender roots, so that nothing is left but a rootless stick. Besides, the purchaser has to pay a large express bill for soil and water. Many of these plants are ordered to be used immediately to fill orders, and when in poor condition, it causes delay and loss.

The man who sends out good stock and in good condition will always receive much larger returns from his ads, as his old customers will come again when they see him advertising anything they want and often he will be recommended to friends; while, on the other hand, when stock is not satisfactory, friends and neighbors will often hear of it.

When a man is sold out of certain varieties, he should never substitute, unless the purchaser tells him to do so. In the spring of 1901 we ordered 3,000 geraniums from 2½-inch pots, stating in our order that there must be in the lot at least 400 S. A. Nutt or Marvel and 400 double white, the balance his own selection but not less than 100 of a kind. Later it proved that among the 400 S. A. Nutt were only 140 to 150 true to name, the balance being different varieties of double and single scarlet. The 400 double white only contained 260 true double white, and many of the other varieties were put up in lots of 100 or more, but many were badly mixed and absolutely worthless to us. Now if this man had dealt fairly he could undoubtedly have sold to us all the geraniums he could grow afterwards.

Another class of plant dealers will, when they receive an order and find that their stock is hardly fit to send out, simply lay the order aside without acknowledgment and fill it perhaps three or four weeks afterwards. Sometimes such stock is refused, and the end of it is a great deal of kicking from both sides, with the usual finish that both parties have lost money. Now I do not wish it understood that there are many who are making these mistakes, for it is a fact that the percentage is quite small, and I believe that we are fast improving, as we had much less trouble last year than ever before, but through a few gentle kicks we might take a hint and try to improve still more.

The packing of plants is also of great importance, for if the plants are packed poorly they generally arrive in such a condition that a man can put one hand on his heart and the other on his pocket-book and cry: "Oh! Lordy Mercy! What shall I do with the profits?" The Florists' Manual is a valuable reference book, which not only gives one a good idea of the culture of many plants, but it also tells you, in very plain language, how to pack them. Many plants can be packed lying flat with perfect safety if laid in the proper way, but all foliage plants, and those with large leaves, or plants for immediate use, should be packed upright. Some firms pack nearly everything upright, in boxes or crates, which is far the better way, but the tops of the crates must be strong enough, so that the expressman can safely put one on top of the other, or else the express charges will be something enormous.

Many firms, and especially the large ones, are very prompt to acknowledge the order as soon as received, stating about when the plants will be shipped, and then send another notice when plants are shipped. It is always proper to write at once, whether or not you can fill the order, and it is certainly greatly appreciated by the buyers, as they generally know then what they can depend upon.

There are now so many different varieties of 'mums on the market that it is impossible to keep track of them all. Sometimes it appears to me that if the advertisers would state the color and season that it would benefit them. For carnations it could be done almost in the same manner, as some varieties are better at one time of the year than at other times.

MONTEREY, CAL.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a portion of the grounds of the Hotel del Monte, taken last winter. In the view are seen a few of the ancient pines and oaks that form the backbone of the landscape effects at this famous place. When the grove was cleared out it left most of the pines with bare trunks, and this was most effectively remedied by covering the trunks with English ivy, which is perfectly hardy here and has made a prodigious growth. The numerous vistas through the grove of ivy-clad trees, with a soft carpet of green grass below, are really the most attractive features of the place.

These effects are supplemented by a liberal use of palms, araucarias and many conifers, not commonly seen in the east. On one side of the hotel is an immense bed of giant fuchsias that fascinates the eastern visitor. They are veritable trees. Nearly all plants reach immense proportions here, though cannas do not seem to do so well as in the east. Probably the cool nights account for this, for while there are no severe frosts at any time of the year, the nights are always cool and frequently very chilly even in midsummer. Geraniums are little seen, but the pelargoniums are fine and make a splendid display.

and in spite of the genial climate he has his troubles. Borers and beetles have attacked the old pines, and he must win in his vigorous campaign against them or lose the most important factor in the landscape. Hydrocyanic acid gas is now being used to kill one borer that works almost wholly in the lower part of the trunk. A canvas tent is fastened around the trunk, made as tight as possible, and the gas generated beneath it. This plan seems to promise success with this particular borer, but there are others that are more difficult to reach, in addition to several scales that are very hard to combat.

And the brown oxalis that was formerly used in the carpet bedding has become a serious pest in the lawns. It does not winterkill here and as the seeds scatter widely when the pods burst and it also spreads by runners, it is almost impossible to eradicate when it has a start.

Mr. Lee's department includes several novel items for a gardener. In addition to looking after the trees and plants he is propagating frogs and terrapin for the hotel table. The ponds where these delicacies are produced are a very interesting feature of the establishment.

There are quite a number of green-houses for palms and similar decorative plants, and for the production of cut flowers, carnations being a leading feature in the last named. There is also a house or so of roses. Few if any roses are seen in the grounds, the soil not being favorable to their growth, though the rose does famously in the gardens across the bay.

The famous Arizona garden, which contains a remarkable collection of cacti and other succulents, is very interesting, but seems now to be less of an attraction to visitors than in past years. Carpet bedding is less employed than in the past, though some excellent examples are still seen in prominent positions.

There is a good sized nursery in which trees and shrubs are being brought on to carry out new planting or to replace specimens that have passed their best.

A WESTERN GARDENER'S NOTES.

I.

It has become quite the fashion for eastern craftsmen to tell of what they have seen in the west. As I recently had the privilege of taking a trip through the east, and of seeing for myself some of the beautiful places of which I have read in the REVIEW, perhaps a brief sketch of my travels may interest some of your readers. I am gardener for Harry G. Selfridge, at whose country home, Harrose, at Lake Geneva, Wis., we have some 10,000 square feet of glass, two large houses being devoted exclusively to orchid culture. Mr. Selfridge is an orchid enthusiast and has established a valuable precedent for employers in that he made this trip possible without expense or loss of time to me. I left Chicago October 2, going first to Boston.

My first side trip was to Brookline, where, at the home of J. E. Rothwell, I found probably the largest collection of cypripediums in America. Mr. Rothwell makes a specialty of cypripediums and selenipediums, which are in a condition to reflect great credit upon his gardener, Mr. Johansson, former orchid grower at Garfield park, Chicago.

The estate of the late H. H. Hunnewell was next visited, and I shall not soon forget the Italian garden, with one of the finest collections of conifers that it has ever been my pleasure to see. About one acre of ground is devoted to rhododendrons, with an extra lattice house over all and a small observation tower under the lattice. Rhododendrons are also planted in the open ground and must present a charming sight in flowering season. There are twenty green-houses in which are grown fine stove and decorative plants, grapes, figs and peaches. The orchids were fine, particularly Odontoglossum crispum and Miltonia vexillaria. We often hear it said that it is impossible to grow odontoglossums in this country, but the degree of perfection reached at the Hunnewell place convinces me that with properly constructed houses and other right conditions, the time is not far distant when they can be grown here as well as abroad. Their cattleyas also are in first class condition, the result, the gardener told me, of feeding with different kinds of liquid. My own experience with fed orchids has not been altogether satisfactory, as they flourish and win applause for their grower for a year or two, then perish. I should like to know the experience of others in this particular.

I was much disappointed in the collection of Oakes Ames, at North Easton, Mass., which has doubtless cost many thousands of dollars, but which appears to have been starved. Much time and skill on the part of Sabin Botton, the present gardener, will be necessary to restore them. Mrs. Fred L. Ames, who also lives at North Easton, has a collection of orchids that is worth going miles to see. There are probably no better houses in the country, and Mr. Craig, her gardener, has everything on the place in splendid condition.

I visited Newport, R. I., and drove around the island first to get a general idea of the place. While everything was beautiful, the high walls surrounding many places gave one the impression of a fort or jail yard. On Mrs. Cornelius

I visited Newport, R. I., and drove around the island first to get a general idea of the place. While everything was beautiful, the high walls surrounding many places gave one the impression of a fort or jail yard. On Mrs. Cornelius

Vanderbilt's estate there was, in front of the castle, a half acre in carpet bed design, very tastefully arranged for color harmony. Retinospora, tender cedrus clipped into pyramids and other forms, fine flower borders and plenty of rhododendrons, made a beautiful view. Hydrangea Otaksa is at home in Newport. Great shrubs, mostly blue, six feet high, are plentiful. The soil contains some iron, and I am told that Hydrangea Otaksa can be wintered out of doors by the use of barrels filled with soil. Cactus dahlias also thrive here as nowhere else in this country. In fact, I have never seen in Europe a degree of perfection in these plants such as has been reached at Newport.

The Goelet place is not large, but beautiful. The elaborate buildings are surrounded with nice lawns bordered with California privet, close trimmed. The greenhouses are substantially made, with iron frames. Herein are grown fine stove plants, palms, roses and carnations. Roses under glass, however, are not a success here. Attacks of mildew are apparent, doubtless owing to heavy fogs from the ocean. The high sea winds also interfere with the successful growth of deciduous trees and shrubs.

Mr. Berwin's place is famed for rhododendrons, and conifers line the terrace. At the farther end of an Italian garden is a fountain in which some nymphæas are planted, presenting a very charming appearance.

The home of Charles Roebling, at Trenton, N. J., was next visited, and I was received very cordially by his gardener, H. T. Clinkaberry. Here I saw a very fine collection of orchids. His cypripediums and selenipediums are monsters, and he has three plants of Cattleya labiata alba that are worth at least $500 each. Every plant in this place is in a condition to reflect credit on those in charge.

In Philadelphia I went to see the famous orchid collection of Mrs. Wilson, five or six of whose houses are devoted to the culture of these flower diamonds. One house is for white orchids, mostly Laelia anceps alba; another for cattleyas and others for mixed varieties, especially cypripediums. What interested me most, however, was a house for seedling orchids in all varieties. Happy the man who will reap the harvest of this seedling collection in years to come. Mr. Perricot, the gardener, has one house 50x150 feet for commercial purposes.

But the rest will have to wait for another paper. CHAS. GEBHARDT.

ETHER FOR PLANT FORCING.

Albert Maumene contributes a lengthy article on etherization to the Revue Scientifique, Paris, which is translated and condensed, as follows, by Public Opinion:

To make plants bloom before the normal blossoming period or when this period has passed to produce them at the exact moment one desires them, is the goal that has been sought in recent years by the use of refrigerating methods and also by the use of anesthetics. This latter method we owe in its present development to a Danish scholar, M. Johannsen of the agricultural school of Copenhagen.

M. Johannsen experimented by anesthetizing the different organs of plants, both those organs which are maturing and those which are in a state of repose, believing that it would be possible by the use of anesthetics to suppress entirely the phenomena of condensation in the maturing organs. He found that a sufficiently large dose of ether suppressed the activity of condensation in the maturing organs, and it was also clear that the plant organs presented under the effects of the ether or chloroform very active hydrolytic phenomena. Further, from his different experiments he was led to pursue others with the view of suspending entirely the period of repose by the use of anesthetics.

These experiments are within the reach of all, since it is merely necessary to place the branches of the willow under a receptacle, with a dose of four-tenths of a cubic centimeter of ether per cubic decimeter of the size of the vessel. After twenty-four hours the branches are taken out, placed in water, and then put in a hothouse or other place equally warm. Non-etherized branches are placed as tests in the same hothouse. After two days the envelopes of the buds on the etherized branches are raised and the silver catkins appear, whereas the non-etherized branches remain inert. These experiments succeed from August to November, after which, the willow leaving the state of repose, ether has no accelerating effect.

Anesthetics, we believe, are destined to replace altogether early forcing methods now in use, since the anesthetizing process makes flowers bloom from July to August, whose normal flowering period takes place only in the spring. Further, this method makes possible the flowering of these plants four or five months earlier than by the ordinary methods of forcing, it shortens by from fifteen to twenty days the duration of the forcing period in the first seasons of November, December and January, and by several days in the later seasons, and it makes all of the buds develop and bloom, while if the plant is treated by the ordinary procedure many of the buds are failures.

In employing anesthetics on a large scale the shrubs destined to be treated are taken from the ground—unless they be grown in pots—and are put for some time in a shed, in order that the ball shall become dry. The etherizing is performed in a closed place, a wooden case with joints plugged with cement and painted all over being suitable. The plants are placed near each other and the ball is covered with sand, the case being then placed above them and surrounded by a padding of sand at the base, in order to prevent the loss of the ether vapor. As this is much heavier than the air it must always be placed in the top of the box, or whatever receptacle is used. The percentage of ether used is 35 to 40 grams per hectoliter of air, at an average temperature of 17 to 19 degrees C. The shrubs remain in the receptacle for 48 hours in ordinary times, although it is necessary to have them remain 72 hours in September and October.

The results of this process are the following: If the shrubs are still covered with leaves these fall as they would do at the first touch of frost or under a prolonged drought, the buds swell and this condition progresses if the plants are placed in a hothouse and treated immediately by ordinary methods. The swelling of the buds is all the more noticeable if the shrubs are denuded of their leaves, the ether-vapor causing the plants to bud with remarkable rapidity. If the operation be performed on lilacs, the thyrsus is developed in ten days and the blooming is completed in a period of from five to eight days. It requires ten to twenty days more for lilacs not etherized to obtain the same degree of advancement, and further, the vegetation and flowering of the latter are generally much more incomplete, because of the fading of a large number of the buds. Thus not only have we economy in labor, in fuel, and in material, but the series of shrubs succeed each other more regularly, the forcing may be commenced earlier, and at the same time the results are surer and in greater perfection.

The dangers attending the use of ether in some cases has led to the adoption of chloroform, which is used in the same way as ether with the exception that a smaller amount is employed, the density of chloroform being twice as great as that of ether and its action four times as intense. The proportion of chloroform per cubic meter of air is 80 to 100 grams, but the exposure time should be longer.

The cause of the action of anesthetics on plants is a matter of theory and may be due to an acceleration of the order of growth, or the phenomena may be the suspension of an arrest which has occurred in the natural growth. We may easily see a similarity between the anesthetizing of plants and human intoxication, for whereas the latter state may be considered one of weakness, which does not produce strength, at the same time it exhilarates dormant energies. On the other hand ether or chloroform may be merely an excitant. The vapors of ether and chloroform only have a momentary effect, although they produce extreme stimulation, shorten the period of repose, and inaugurate vegetation.

PUBLICITY FOR NURSERYMEN.

The following is an extract from an address by Frank B. White, delivered before the American Association of Nurserymen:

No man who has undertaken advertising, treated it with the same degree of intelligence that he would any other branch of his business, utilized common-sense and sticktoitiveness, but will testify to the efficacy, force and power of judicious publicity. All business must be advertised in some way, either by word of mouth or other announcement, so we may as well settle one thing here and now: When well done, advertising pays.

The nursery business affords a most excellent opportunity for attractive advertising, not only newspaper advertising but the auxiliary lines as well. You will understand that while I advocate newspaper advertising as the best known sort of publicity, it is not all that is necessary, by any means. Without attractive and forceful literature, your newspaper advertising would be a flat failure.

The nursery business affords a most excellent opportunity because it brings us near the great heart of nature, and the advertising should be as natural as man can make it. Illustrations should be true to nature, true to life. Advertisements should be constructed along the line of absolute honesty and truthfulness. Advertising is heart to heart talk concerning that which is advertised. We admire beauty, therefore, our advertising should be made beautiful. We admire sensible argument, a forceful presentation of the fact, a harmonious whole, a composite of art, editorial ability and mechanical make-up that pleases and satisfies the eye and lingers in the mind as something worth remembering.

In your business you have a combination of luxury and beauty. In the advertising business we should have a combination of attractiveness and forcefulness, but all newspaper advertising can do for you is to present you in a favorable light to a possible customer. The catalogue, the booklet and your correspondence must do the rest.

I believe that advertising should be made not only as good as the other fellow's, but better. Catalogues should be constructed with the idea of bettering anything that has been sent out. Make them so good that it will hurt one to destroy them, that they will find a place on the parlor table and be kept as beautiful examples of the printer's art, pleasing to behold, easy to read, convincing in argument, handsome in illustration, and you have won the day, or you have beaten the other fellow by so many points that it will be hard for him to overtake you.

Some entertain the belief that the only way to sell nursery stock is through agents. I do not agree with them. Advertising is your salesman, working while you sleep; quiet, unobtrusive, ready to wait until an opportune time comes before it makes its argument; offending no one, but making friends everywhere it goes, a thing that cannot be said of all agents or salesmen. I know for an absolute certainty that many concerns have lost business because of the lack of tact of the agent on the road. If your advertising is well done, there will be no danger from this source. I am not ready to condemn the agency system, but I maintain that it is a very expensive luxury, and that it could be dispensed with to the improvement of the nursery business on the whole.

I am not familiar with the commission allowed nursery agents. I presume that it is in the neighborhood of 40 per cent. Somebody has to pay the 40 per cent. Of course it is usually the fruit grower. It is possible that the agents sell $1,000,000 worth of nursery stock a year. They make $400,000, which may be termed an advertising expenditure, as it is charged to your sales account.

Is there a man who will tell me the same expenditure in judicious newspaper, catalogue and auxiliary advertising would not do the nursery business and the country at large more good than would be possible through this agency scheme?

Some say the nursery business does not permit of advertising to the same extent as other commercial operations, as the season is limited and advertising must principally be done during the spring months. I would say in answer to such an assertion that other lines of trade are just as limited by seasons and still are successfully advertised, and many nurserymen have found it profitable and have made a success of it even though the season is limited.

I quote from one nurseryman who wisely says: "The only reason that we can assign why so many nurserymen do not advertise is because there is a large per cent who are really only tree growers, who do not have the business ability nor push to sell their own productions, and it is this class of nurserymen who take but little stock in advertising, and in fact advertising would do them but little good because we merely look upon advertising as a means of bringing prospective customers to our door and introducing us. This is all that any paper or periodical can do. The nurseryman must then have tact and talent and the requisites of a business man necessary to interest the prospective buyer, hold his attention, gain his confidence and get his order. Our experience is that newspaper advertising and catalogue work are necessary adjuncts to success in this business."

Another correspondent makes reference to the follow-up system and states that he is not quite sure that it pays to write many letters in answer to an inquiry. It is my opinion that it does pay. The present method of producing imitation typewritten letters is so perfect that it enables one to fill in the name of an inquirer so nearly like the real thing that not many can detect it, but a genuine letter is always better. If I were in the nursery business and should receive an inquiry that cost me say 50 cents or $1 in response to my advertisement, I would be willing to expend at least half that sum if necessary in getting a good attractive catalogue in the hands of my correspondent, and in following up the acquaintance made through the inquiry until I had landed the order or discovered the reason why I did not.

This following up of the inquiry is a very necessary part of successful advertising. When you receive an inquiry in response to your advertising you should make it your imperative duty to treat that inquiry just as you would a new friend. It costs something to get an introduction to that friend. It is worth your while to pay a little more for the privilege of doing business with him. I would treat that individual inquiry just as if there were no others and as if the success of my business depended upon making a sale to that particular individual. The careful following up of that new acquaintance may lead to a business friendship profitable not only in his case but in that of his friends and his friends' friends, for advertising has wonderfully expansive power.

Perhaps you will question my judgment when I say to you that I verily believe that this association could wisely expend an advertising appropriation upon general publicity that would induce people to use fruit more largely. If you desire to sell your nursery stock you must help create a demand for the product of the fruit grower. An appropriation of $100,000 for annual expenditure in advertising, advocating the use of fruit in the home as a health food, would, in my judgment, make a demand for nursery stock such as this country has never dreamed of, and the question of price would be secondary, the question of quality uppermost. Your business or profession would be elevated to a higher plane and instead of being regarded as a tree grower or a nursery farmer, you would be recognized in the commercial world as operators of one of the great industries of the country, which, indeed, you are today although but few appreciate it. You are all ready for such a campaign. All that is needed is backbone and money. Advertising will stiffen the backbone, return your money, bring you peace and plenty and the world will be the better for it.

GALENA, ILL.—B. F. Vandervate adds to his business largely by visiting nearby towns with stocks of plants.

LAWTON, MICH.—The Northside Greenhouses have been purchased by George Allard, who is busily engaged in tearing them down and rebuilding them at his own place east of town.

AKRON, O.—H. Heepe's Sons have opened a store at 26 S. Main street and will handle everything in the cut flower and plant line. The greenhouses are located a half-mile west of the center of town.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There has been lots of life in the cut flower market, most encouraging with so much stuff about. This activity is traceable in shipping orders to the competition between the department stores and to increased business at the stores. Halloween parties, All Saints' day, a few November weddings, etc., etc. Chrysanthemums have been the chief factor, and the small and medium-sized blooms have sold quite as well as the fancies; prices, especially on the latter, have receded.

Roses are greatly overdone, as usual at this season; still, a great many are sold at fair prices. Carnations are not so plentiful, but are in fair demand. Violets have sold well.

Quite a lot of cattleyas have been marketed, Pennock, Niessen and Dunn & Co. all having them. Cyps are coming in slowly as yet. Valley is fine and sells fairly well. Mignonette and sweet peas are to be had in small quantities; the former is very good for so early. Asparagus has sold well.

The Flower Market.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Flower Market was held on Tuesday, President Heacock in the chair. Both amendments to the by-laws were acted on. The first, changing the beginning of the fiscal year from October 1 to July 1, was adopted unanimously. The second, abolishing the limit of fifty shares for each stockholder, lacked thirty-five votes of the two-thirds necessary for adoption. The following officers were elected at the directors' meeting, held immediately afterwards, to serve for the ensuing year: President, Wm. K. Harris; vice-president, Joseph Heacock; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, Charles E. Meehan.

With the Decorators.

One of the handsomest decorations ever made in a store in this city was arranged last Monday by Hugh Graham, at Gimbel Brothers'. The main aisle on the second floor, running from Eighth street to Ninth street, was elaborately decorated with chrysanthemums and choice flowers of other varieties. This lavish display was the more remarkable because the same department store was expensively decorated for its fall opening six weeks ago. The store was a veritable flower show, maintained in fresh condition throughout the week, which was a most creditable departure. To be beforehand with their competitor, another department store, Suillenburgh ordered the Wm. Graham Co. to arrange for them an extensive decoration last Saturday. For this occasion Leo Niessen furnished 16,000 chrysanthemums, 300 American Beauties, 500 tea roses, and a great quantity of asparagus, besides other things; greens and electric lights were extensively used, making a fine effect. J. J. Habermehl's Sons decorated the tea room at John Wanamaker's on Monday with assorted chrysanthemums of various colors and other material.

Wyncote.

The extensive range of glass owned by Joseph Heacock never looked in better condition than one bright afternoon this week, when a couple of visitors were conducted through the houses by the proprietor. The Beauties were in splendid condition, a lot of second year plants in solid beds being especially vigorous. All the plants were making good growth and appeared free from spot. Liberty, Bride and Bridesmaid gave promise of good results next month. The immense stock of arecas and kentias showed that rich green foliage so dear to the heart of a palm grower. They appeared perfectly clean, as did the entire place, Mr. Heacock putting his belief, that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," into practice in every detail of his place. There was a house of cocos, a fine batch of Cypripedium insigne just coming into flower, and two houses of carnations, chiefly Mrs. Frances Joost and White Cloud, looking as though they would produce a fine lot of flowers for the holidays. Sheds for soil and manure give needed protection during the winter. The features of this place are its compactness, its perfect system of ventilation, and its arrangements for regulating the temperature and the air of orderliness everywhere apparent. A prosperous season seems assured.

The Florists' Club.

The November meeting of the club was held on Tuesday evening. An amendment to the by-laws by which dues must be paid in advance, was proposed and after discussion, adopted.

Notes.

Leo Niessen had an order for 3,000 assorted chrysanthemums last week to be shipped to Washington, D. C., and was able to fill it nicely.

Alburger & Cascaden, Kenwood, near West Laurel Hill, are building two houses, each 20x150 feet, to hold their increasing stock. The indefatigable D. T. Connor secured the order for the iron posts, iron gutters and cypress roofing material for Lord & Burnham. The same firm has just completed a conservatory, 20x90 feet, for the Hotel Brighton, Atlantic City, N. J. It will be used chiefly for decorative plants.

The Flower Market presents a very compact and busy appearance. The improvements embrace moving the directors' room, new counters and extra electric lights.

Paul J. Klinghorn, late with Geo. M. Moss, is now with Dumont & Co.

In speaking of the Liberty houses last week, at A. Farenwald's, I should have said they were constructed by Lord & Burnham.

The Fall Show.

The annual chrysanthemum exhibition of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society will open next Tuesday evening in Horticultural Hall. Great preparations are being made to make the affair successful. It is hoped that every grower, whether private or commercial, will exhibit anything of merit that he possesses. These shows are invaluable in educating the public, and stimulating a taste for horticulture. PHIL.

DETROIT.

Visit to Mt. Clemens.

On Friday, October 30, occurred the annual outing of the Florists' Club to Mt. Clemens on invitation of the members who reside in that city. A special car carried the party, which consisted of fifty-two persons. A short stop was made at the home of "Sullivan's Roses" and they were found in fine condition, the entire stock looking well, especially a bench of Harrisii that were very fine. On arriving at Mt. Clemens a call to luncheon was sounded at Breitmeyer's, and a most agreeable half hour was spent inspecting and testing saurkraut, frankfurts, etc., washed down by home-made wine. The party then wandered at pleasure through the range of glass, inspecting the new rose, as yet nameless. The writer noticed one peculiar thing in its treatment, and that is the planting with Beauties, Meteors, Maids and others, and I must say that it shows up well under all conditions, although the weather so far has been such that very little difference in temperature could be maintained. Its growth is wonderful. A house of Perle and one of Meteor were charming, for the outlook for profit is good. Some very fine 'mums were seen and the entire place is in better shape than at any time previously visited, but I have seen better carnations and violets here before.

Robert Klagge, the erstwhile violet king, has taken a tumble off the throne, but he can be given another title, that of carnation king of Mt. Clemens, for he has some of the best anywhere and in some new seedlings something to be proud of. Enchantress, Morning Glory, Harlowarden and Lawson are the main varieties grown. At Mr. Stevens' were seen the best houses of violets, also some fine carnations.

Jas. Taylor says the old violet growers have all met their Waterloo, and he is no exception, but his violets are improving and no doubt he will be looking pleasant about Christmas time. J. E. Carey, as usual, has nothing to be seen (that is what he says himself, so I have good authority), but we found Beauties in fine form, carnations and violets very good and some good apples.

One more stop at a new establishment built by Mr. Von Borselager, consisting of three houses, one of carnations especially fine, completed the rounds. The party, increased to the number of seventy by the addition of the Mt. Clemens florists, then proceeded to the Sherman house, where an elegant banquet was partaken of, the Detroit florists being the guests of the Mt. Clemens craftsmen. After a few brief ragtime talks by different ones and an attempt at singing Auld Lang Syne the happy crowd returned home, all well pleased with the day's outing. RAG.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The wholesale trade has settled down to the conclusion that there can be no material change in market conditions until after the chrysanthemum exhibition. The killing frosts haven't killed anything to date, and Monday of this week saw a genuine summer temperature, with no change in sight.

This week society will manifest its return to civilization by the dog show. Next week it is expected the great 'mum show will assert its drawing power among the 400 and the great horse show the following week will inaugurate the regular demand for flowers that the retailers have been so patiently anticipating. And so, as is always the case, the gloom will be dissipated and the sun will shine for wholesalers and retailers alike, and the long period of dullness will speedily be forgotten. Already the retail stores give evidence of the coming revival. The decorations in the windows of the leading florists are gorgeous, and the chrysanthemums in abundance and beauty at reasonable prices give no one an excuse for lack of neatness and beauty in window decorations.

A few of the finest 'mums touched 50 cents last week. Special Beauties, while occasionally valued at 25 cents, can be had in large quantities as low as $150 a 1,000; superb stock, but too abundant for the present demand. The violet was king on Saturday and Monday, and commanded its own price, with good prospects of maintaining present values.

Various Notes.

Next Monday the New York Florists' Club will have President Breitmeyer as a visitor, accompanied by his new rose, which it is his intention to exhibit there, as well as at the 'mum show. This week he will allow the Tarrytown, Madison and Tuxedo rose growers to have a look at it.

Everything moves swimmingly toward the success of the great flower show in New York, under the auspices of the American Institute and the Chrysanthemum Society of America, a wonderfully strong combination that precludes any possibility of failure. I predict a genuine surprise to the public and an exhibit of flowers, as President Herrington aptly puts it, "such as the world has never seen." The annual convention of the society promises to be of special value, and a large attendance of members is assured. The New York Florists' Club is taking a hearty interest in the success of the exhibition and no small credit is due its members for their patient and persistent efforts in former years, out of which has developed the opportunity of the present year. For the club it was a thankless and losing game, but its membership never flinched in its loyalty to the management of these annual exhibitions, and it will share worthily in the triumph that at last seems a certainty.

Julius Roehrs, of Rutherford, N. J., will entertain horticultural visitors during the last days of the 'mum show, November 11 and 12, at his auction sale of palms, orchids, etc. A great attendance is anticipated. The stock grown by Mr. Roehrs has a national reputation.

The Manhattan Supply Co., of 440 Eleventh avenue, has sold its business to S. Jacobs & Sons, of Brooklyn.

The New Jersey Cut Flower Co., of 37 West Thirty-eighth street, has sold its business to the Kurzman-Dacre Co., which will conduct a wholesale florist business there.

John Weir celebrated his fifty-eighth birthday last week. If he had called it his thirty-eighth no one would have disputed him. He will still be buying flowers at 5 a. m. in 1950.

Bradshaw & Hartman are adding hardy stock to their plant department. Chas. Millang also has about everything in the plant line to offer.

R. L. Perkins is recuperating very slowly from his serious illness.

Some grand artistic work was done by the leading retailers last week in funeral wreaths, one valued at $200, of orchids and violets, at Bowe's being exceptionally beautiful.

All the seedsmen, bulbmen and nurserymen have had a grand season and all are optimistic, and it is an inspiration to talk with them. Tulips and mixed hyacinths are short and the general demand will leave no surplus when the season closes. Bulbs are moving rapidly since the cold snap of the early part of last week and Elliott's auction draws its usual crowd of buyers Tuesdays and Fridays.

Geo. M. Gerharty, formerly with Daniels & Fisher, of Denver, in their cut flower department, is now with one of the leading New York retailers.

Ambrose Cleary is much pleased with his progress in his new retail store at 500 Madison avenue. Mr. Cleary has had considerable experience with his brother, and as manager in one of the Brooklyn department stores.

The reference to gardenias and cattleyas last week should have read Young & Nugent. Reidel & Spicer are also handling a goodly quantity of these popular flowers, and a large stock of Asparagus plumosus daily.

Roses were a drug at one time last week, on Twenty-ninth street, one lot of 1,600 going at 60 cents a hundred and Melba carnations were so sleepy that one lot of 200 could not be disposed of at 25 cents a hundred.

The plan of making up dollar boxes, containing a dozen roses, half a dozen 'mums and the necessary dressing seems to find favor on Broadway again, and helps materially in disposing of the overflow.

Scallon's new store approaches completion and will be one of the best in the city.

The white palace being built by Siebrecht & Son, on Fifth avenue, is ready for the finishing touches, and should be completed in ample time for the Christmas trade. It will be a revelation to many and its situation cannot well be excelled.

The flower shows at Tarrytown, Madison and Tuxedo this week promise well, and the managers are enthusiastic over the prospect of grand blooms and ideal exhibition weather. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The business for the month of October, according to some of the leading storemen, was much better than they expected, though mostly work for funerals and decorations. The counter trade in cut flowers is still somewhat slow and cooler weather is needed to stimulate that part of the business. The horse show, which opens to-night, for one week should help the cut flower trade greatly, as a great many choice blooms will be in demand, and a great many orders for this occasion have already been placed.

Chrysanthemums, of course, are the main flower just at present. They are much in evidence throughout the city and the flower stores are making pretty decorations of them in their show windows. Blooms of the first quality are not over-plentiful, the demand for these is good and $3 per dozen is asked for the best. Fairly good home-grown stock is plentiful, but this stock is moving rather slowly. The increased crop of these had a bad effect on the rose market, which is at present very much overcrowded with all kinds of roses of good quality. Brides and Maids are still in the lead, as to quantity, and good stock can be bought at $3 and $4 per hundred. There is also a good supply of other roses, such as Meteor, Golden Gate, Carnot, Perle and Sunrise. American Beauties are selling better than the smaller roses but the supply is equal to the demand; $2.50 and $3.00 is the price for fancy; other grades run from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen.

Carnations are not over-plentiful, with fancy stock scarce. Good white had a nice call the past week. The choice stock brings $2, others from $1 to $1.50 per hundred. Enchantress, Crocker and Wolcott look about the best. Good reds are very scarce. Violets are in great demand and the market is not overloaded with them, as is usual at this time of the year. Good stock brings 35 cents and those with short stems 25 cents per hundred. Good lily of the valley seems to sell better this season than ever before, and some very good stock is in the market at $4 and $5 per hundred. The market is well supplied with smilax and asparagus, which has a good demand at the usual market prices.

The weather here has been most beautiful the past week, and plants of all kinds are having a good sale, especially pot chrysanthemums, of which some very fine specimens are seen in the West End establishments.

Various Notes.

James S. Wilson, of Western Springs, Ill., spent Friday, Saturday and Sunday in his native city. "Jimmy" has many friends here, and the boys in the trade are always glad to see him.

D. J. Crosby, of the United States Department of Agriculture, was a visitor last week. Mr. Crosby visited the school gardens of the Civic Improvement League and praised the organization for the work done. He was especially pleased with the boy's garden operated by the league near Shaw's Garden.

The Notre Dame University, of South Bend, Ind., shipped four carloads of century plants to the World's Fair grounds. The plants were purchased by the landscape department and are stored in the basement of the Administration building on the World's Fair grounds. They will be placed on the borders of the great cascade in the spring. The plants are exceptionally fine.

The finance committee met at Fred Weber's Friday night to open the books. This committee will have charge of the financial end of the next convention of the S. A. F. The committee is composed of Otto Koenig, chairman; Fred L. Weber, F. W. Taylor, A. B. Halstedt, J. F. Ammann, John Young and Emil Schray. The report will be heard at the next meeting of the club.

Mr. Felter, at 4335 Lexington avenue, has a fine lot of chrysanthemum plants and other stock which looks very choice.

Theo. Klockenkemper, up near Baden, is sending in a fine lot of Colonel Appleton chrysanthemums which could be classed as prize winners. Theodore is surely there with the goods this year.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, is sending some fine stock to this market. Among the lot are his famous Perle roses and about the best American Beauties that come in.

W. E. Jordan, who has the old Jordan Floral Co. greenhouses, on Union avenue, is now in good shape for the winter, having built two new houses and remodeled the old ones. Willie has a good stock of chrysanthemums, callas, stevia and smilax.

A. Berdan, of Kirkwood, Mo., is sending in the best lily of the valley, of which Mr. Berdan is making a specialty this year.

F. W. Herman and Charlie Ude, of Kirkwood, are again in line with fine violets and carnations, so are Pilcher, Gross and Ahner, of the same place.

Beyer Brothers are in line with some very fine pot chrysanthemums and other choice decorative plants. They have had an excellent trade so far this season.

Frank Fillmore, the man who never misses a club meeting, has his big rose and carnation houses in excellent shape for the winter. Frank's stock always has a good call at Kuehn's.

The next Florists' Club meeting will be held next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Odd Fellow's building, hall No. 2. An exhibition of chrysanthemum blooms will be made by our local growers. Prizes have been offered, $5, $3 and $2, for the best vases of twelve blooms. All chairmen of committees are requested to attend, as business of great importance to them will come up. The attendance of all the members is requested by the president.

H. A. Dreer's two representatives, Messrs. Creighton and Clark, were in town recently calling on the trade.

The express companies are again delivering consignments on time, the strike having been declared off and nearly all the old employes returned to work. The companies won the strike.

Bowling.

Four St. Louis bowlers, with the assistance of E. W. Guy, of Belleville, bowled a match game with the crack Belleville team last Sunday. The St. Louis bowlers were Beyer, Beneke, Kuehn and Miller, and they were defeated in all three games. A return match will be played on Friday, November 13, on our home alleys. Monday our regular bowling night, only seven of the members showed up. The following scores were made:

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There is a very strong demand in this market—for a change in the weather. Following last week's killing frost and a couple of crisp days which put new life into things in general, we have had a week of Indian summer which has enervated the market. Supplies have steadily increased and quality has, if anything, retrograded, although good roses are generally obtainable for all orders. Monday saw a shortening up of the supply of carnations and a momentary stiffening of prices, but it was doubtless due, more than anything else, to the fact that Sunday was too nice a day to spend in the greenhouse picking flowers, for Tuesday saw very large receipts and the market slow at reduced prices.

Roses have been accumulating very rapidly in the past few days. The local trade is again very light and shipping demand only serves to take up the better grades, so that the short-stemmed stock has become unwieldy. While a very small part of the receipts may have sold for 6 cents, occasionally some extra select at 8 cents, the average will be very low indeed this week, probably lower than even mid-summer averages. Beauties are not so plentiful and are cleaning up at rather better prices than are usual at this season of the year. Meteor is in fair demand, also Liberty, but the latter is not largely in evidence.

The warm, bright weather has brought in chrysanthemums with a rush. The mid-season varieties are largely in evidence, including such sorts as Timothy Eaton and Major Bonnaillon, which latter sort seems to be more largely grown than in the last two or three years. Prices are low in comparison to the quality of the stocks offered. Ivory, both pink and white, continues to be a good seller at from 8 to 12 cents for well grown stock. Violets have taken a tumble from the altitude to which they climbed during the cool weather during the horse show; dollar-and-a-half violets then are six-bits now, and well sold at that. Callas and Harrisii meet with a slow but steady sale. Valley is hanging back.

There is too much asparagus in the market. The sale is very much greater than it ever was before, for this article is coming into general use for all sorts of decorations, but the production has been increased faster than the sale has extended. Smilax is equal to all needs, but not so plentiful as to cause concern.

The Next Exhibition.

The program committee of the club met yesterday and completed an outline for the season's campaign and, more particularly, perfected plans for the November exhibition, which is to be held on Tuesday, November 17. Leonard Kill is manager of the exhibition and John P. Risch is in charge of the entertainment which is to follow. It is proposed to have the show open at 2 o'clock and the public is to be admitted by card, each member of the club to be provided with tickets for distribution where they will do the most good. The subjects shown are to include roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and pot plants. It is the intention to make this a much more complete and pretentious affair than the very successful little show of last month.

The Atlas block, the same in which so many wholesalers are located, at the corner of Wabash and Randolph, has been selected as the location. The same judges who served last month, the C. S. A. Committee, will act and be assisted by John Reardon, F. W. Timme and Phil Broadbeck in handling the carnations. F. F. Benthey has been delegated to look after the wants of the visitors. At the close of the show everybody is expected to go to supper, this having been one of the pleasantest features of last month's little affair. Hon. J. J. Feeley will be the speaker of the evening.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club met last evening at Handel hall and the new officers were installed before a good crowd. Several new names were proposed for membership, and the season's work forwarded in good shape.

At the November 18 meeting of the club Prof. Hasselbring, of the University of Chicago, will talk on fungi, and F. A. Thompson will discuss insects and insecticides. In December the club will give its first grand annual ball.

Wieter Bros. are planning to fill the rest of that ten-acre tract with glass next spring. The houses will be 265 feet long but the short-roofed style of construction will be adopted.

On October 29 fire did $1,000 damage in the greenhouses of Julius Schau, One Hundred and Fourth street and Curtis avenue. The fire started in the boiler room.

At a meeting of the Chicago Florists' Bowling Club, at Hauswirth's, October 29, George Asmus was elected president and John Lambros secretary. The choice of a captain was deferred. It is planned to bowl regularly hereafter.

E. C. Amling is finding a ready market for orchids.

Frank Garland says wild smilax is slow sale.

The second annual flower show is on at Joliet this week, and on Friday afternoon quite a party will go out to see the display and help the good work along.

George Reinberg is buying material for another addition of eleven 265-foot houses to go up next spring. This is just duplicating this year's addition.

Clifford Prunner, of E. F. Winter-son's, is again laid up. John Degnan is at home off the road. At Kansas City he met Lloyd Vaughan, Arnold Ringier and C. W. Scott.

Peter Reinberg is getting in a very fine cut of Chatenay and finds them moving very well indeed.

C. L. Washburn calls attention to the fact that the fine weather seems to be bringing in the mid-season chrysanthemums a week or ten days early and that there is a possibility of a short supply for Thanksgiving.

C. M. Dickinson, at Hunt's, says Miss Chittenden's violets, from Lansing, are the best this well known grower has produced. Miss Chittenden herself was in town last week.

A. Dietsch has had very good health all summer, but is again troubled with asthma and will shortly go to the southwest for the winter.

The George Wittbold Co. has a nice stock of young plants of Cibotium Scheidei, which they think is one of the best things which has come on the market in a long time.

Benthey & Co. say their New Castle crop is right on but that the stock all moves well.

E. E. Pieser has been under the weather this week, suffering with a bad cold.

Weiland & Risch are cutting some very good Eaton.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. are getting in some Enchantress with very long stems and fine flowers.

John Zeck, at Budlong's, says shipping trade is good. They have a large cut of 'mums.

Randall is getting some fine Beauties from Buettner and Bauske.

M. Winandy is cutting 1,500 to 1,800 Meteors a day from his new houses, but he was late in getting the houses piped and the proportion of bull-headed buds is very large. However a few days more will straighten things out.

The bowlers have received an invitation from James Hartshorne to visit Joliet Saturday night for the annual match.

Owing to the crowded and over-heated condition of the parcel-room at the Auditorium and Annex, Manager Roth states that in future flowers for guests may be delivered at the clerks' desks, when they will be sent to the rooms by bell boys without delay.

DAYTON, O.—Fewer chrysanthemums than usual are being grown here this year. H. M. Altick had his early white in good shape and easily disposed of a whole house of it. Carnations and roses look well throughout this neighborhood.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Local trade has improved slightly over last week. Several large weddings helped business considerably and did much to use up the large surplus of chrysanthemums which were so plentiful last week. At this writing, Monday, November 2, chrysanthemums are better sale and no accumulations. Medium and the smaller sized flowers are really hard to obtain. The wholesalers report shipping business steadily on the increase and say that the demand for fancy carnations exceeds the supply. In roses this is just reversed; fine stock is very plentiful and the minor grades hard to move at respectable figures. Some good longiflorum lilies are in the market which meet with only ordinary sale. Single and double violets of good quality are plentiful. Fine long stemmed sweet peas, Blanche Ferry, and mignonette are among the novelties and they are eagerly bought up. Smilax is arriving in large quantities and selling slowly. Valley and adiantum are moving out rapidly.

Notes.

C. W. Goodwin & Sons, Bridgeville, Pa., have a pure white sport of the White Ivory 'mum, which is a fine thing, more showy and better form and again from a commercial standpoint, a much better flower than its parent. The form and flower resemble Robinson. Mr. Goodwin has now 300 plants which are producing quantities of blooms. The stock will be put on the market this season.

Sidney Gibbs, of Woodville, Pa., is cutting some very fancy 'mums.

G. & J. W. Ludwig have placed on the market their famous pink dahlia Ludwigi-ana.

Wm. Lauch is right in it on Robinson 'mums this season. He is cutting on an average of 300 fine flowers per day.

The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. is receiving quantities of elegant sweet peas, mignonette and longiflorum lilies. They are making regular shipments of chrysanthemums to New Orleans, La.

Blind Bros. are now cutting some fancy Maids, Brides and Liberties and are sending them to their new retail stores.

Fred Burki's Bakerstown place is sending in quantities of well grown Beauties, Maids and Brides. Gibsonia, Pa., is now Mr. Burki's address.

GARDENING UNDER GLASS

Not long since, in London, there was an exhibition consisting entirely of a display of vegetables, mostly produced by private gardeners.

SOIL FOR VEGETABLES.

Suitable soil is of the utmost importance in the growing of any crop, and as those growing vegetables under glass cannot afford to take any chances, considering the expense at which the houses are run, they had better try and procure the best possible material. The present is a good time to get the compost together. It is poor policy to handle the soil when too wet, but it is just as bad to put up the compost heap when the soil is dry and powdery; hence the fall is the best time to catch the soil in the right condition.

We make a compost for our vegetable benches with just as much care as we do for our roses or carnations and find that it pays. We change the soil every year in the raised benches and in the solid beds remove a few inches of the old surface soil and replace with fresh material. Good sod soil and partly decomposed manure are the only ingredients necessary for the compost. Where a large quantity is used the plow had better be employed in the turning up of the sod, but it should not be taken any deeper than about three inches. We prefer to make the heap rather shallow, as it is very important that it should be frozen right through, and we choose, if possible, a shady situation, to enable the soil to retain the natural moisture as much as possible.

The heap is made up of alternate layers of sod and partly decomposed manure, being topped off with a good layer of the latter to help conserve the moisture. The amount of manure must be regulated according to the quality of the soil, but as a general rule about one load of manure to five of soil will be about rich enough for ordinary purposes. Manure from the cow barn is preferable to that from the horse stable, as it is less liable to generate fungus. The heap should be allowed to remain intact until the end of the following summer or within a week or two of the time it is intended to be used. Then it should be turned at least twice and well chopped up, to thoroughly mix the ingredients. For lettuce, cauliflower and such crops additions of artificial manures will be unnecessary, but for stronger feeders, like tomatoes and cucumbers, the addition of bone meal will be beneficial. This should be worked into the soil at the first turning, which had better be done about three weeks before it is intended to be used, as the bone will generate more or less heat; hence the necessity of allowing it time to work off before the soil is used.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis Mo., June, 1904.

TED PEAT, Norwalk, O., is erecting a building in which to start a seed store.

A FIVE per cent delivery on contract orders seems to be the vogue in cucumber seed.

THE coming of the California growers is being heralded. The advance guard should reach the east within the month.

PETER GARTON, seed merchant, of Liverpool and Manchester, England, contemplates establishing a seed and experimental farm in Canada.

INFORMATION comes that Mr. Comont will sail for home shortly; Mr. Dicks, Jr., having already sailed, the field will be clear for the Californians.

THE sweet corn and cucumber seed growers are backward in pushing themselves forward just now. Things have not been coming their way recently.

"GIRLS wanted," is a seasonable sign in front of the warehouses of the bean and pea growers. With the mills humming and the picking machines busy deliveries of peas should be well under way by the end of the month.

ORCHARD grass seed, which has been firmly held by the Kentucky growers for several months for the price of $2 per bushel, now is coming freely into the market at Jeffersonville, where T. J. Lindley has bought nearly 20,000 bushels at $1.46.

THE question of raising cucumber seed is getting to be serious. There is no likelihood that the pickle men will get more of the fruits than they need to salt down for some seasons to come. The short crops of the past two years and the high prices paid at the salting stations, resulting therefrom, makes an increased demand for the seed and lessens the opportunities to secure it. The regulars in cucumber seed growing have failed to meet the emergency, being no better off this year than last. Every effort has unquestionably been put forth by them, and it may be that they will accomplish something the coming year; as it stands at present, however, the trade is up against a hard proposition.

BURPEE & Co., in their advance wholesale price list, say: "It is a most remarkable coincidence that, owing to extremely unfavorable climatic conditions, the shortages in seed crops the past season have been upon the same lines as for the previous year. Cucumber, squash and many melons have produced only one-fourth of an average yield, as have also late varieties of sweet corn; early varieties of sweet corn have averaged from 40 to 70 per cent of a normal crop. All first-early peas, except Alaskas, are extremely short, several varieties averaging only half a crop, while many long-podded late peas are almost equally as short. Wax beans bid fair to rule as high in price as last year, while of several green-podded bush beans there are not enough in sight to meet normal requirements. Tomatoes and sweet peas are also short, but not to such a distressing extent."

IMPORTANT EXPERIMENTS.

The cause of the dry rot in onions and onion sets is being investigated at the Illinois Agricultural College. Professor Lloyd, of that institution, is working on samples sent to him by S. F. Leonard, of Chicago. The outcome of the investigation is likely to be quite interesting and of much value.

Up to the present many ideas have been advanced and many theories given as to causes for the onion disease mentioned, but nothing final as to cause and nothing definite as to remedy has been handed out. In connection with the experiment on the bulbs, Professor Lloyd has also, at the request of Mr. Leonard, investigated the web-like fungus that frequently appears when onion seed is being tested for germinating power. The seed trade generally has held to the idea that this fungus has affected the sprouting strength of the seed, and, that it probably contained the germs that caused the dry rot. Microscopic investigation by the professor, however, shows that this fungus does not affect the germination of the seed, nor has it anything to do with a dry rot or other disease which may develop in a crop. It is probable that a report of these interesting investigations will appear in pamphlet form when the findings are completed.

GOVERNMENT SEEDS.

A Washington telegram under date of November 3 says:

Distribution of garden seed in the aggregate amount of 1,000 tons is in progress in every state and territory in the Union by the Department of Agriculture today. The value of the packages will exhaust the appropriation of $270,000 voted by the last congress and the packages will number 45,000,000. Every senator, representative and delegate in congress will have 12,500 packages to distribute among his constituents, while the department will itself send out 700,000 packages to correspondents and 800,000 to state grange organizations and several hundred thousand more to weather bureaus and government experimental stations. It is the largest distribution ever made by the government.

The distribution this year is several months in advance of that of last year and is being sent into six districts, into which the country has been divided. Congressmen having city constituencies will receive a large supply of flower seeds for window boxes, lots and dooryards and may trade in their vegetable seeds for more flower seeds if they desire. Cotton and tobacco seeds also will be distributed in large quantities to districts where they are available.

FERRY PROTEST SUSTAINED.

Judge Waite, of the Board of United States General Appraisers, made a decision today in the reappraisal protest cases of D. M. Ferry & Co. and the Lohman Seed Co., of Detroit, says the New York Commercial, which seems to settle the question of whether there is a wholesale price for foreign garden seeds in the strict sense of the term.

It appears that Ferry & Co. and the Lohman Seed Co. entered garden seeds at the port of Detroit at valuations which Collector Rich thought insufficient, notwithstanding the fact that the appraiser of the port was of the opinion that the seeds were properly entered so far as values were concerned. The collector, it is said, acted largely on information furnished him by United States special treasury agents, and not being satisfied with the conclusions reached by the local appraiser, he appealed to the board of general appraisers for a review of the appraiser's decision. Judge Waite took the cases under consideration, and has devoted a great deal of time to taking testimony. Leading importers of seeds in New York and elsewhere have been called upon for information. The greater part of the evidence placed before Judge Waite appears to have supported the contention that garden seeds are to be classed with those commodities which have what may be termed a personal characteristic.

such as belongs to works of art or such articles dependent for their value upon the reputation of the producer. Another point established by the testimony was to the effect that practically all the garden seeds under consideration are produced upon contract, the usual quantities being quite large.

Although Judge Waite did not feel at liberty to discuss the Ferry and Lohman cases in detail, it was learned that the general appraiser reaches the conclusion that there are no wholesale prices for garden seeds, and that consequently the American customs authorities will arrive at the invoice price under section 11 of the customs administrative act by analogy.

In the course of Judge Waite's investigation, he has considered many invoices of garden seeds entered at New York and other ports, but finds that in very few instances have the invoiced prices been raised by the local appraiser, although it is said to be apparent that importers have been forced to raise the entered value of their invoices in order to avoid penalties, as it is a question with them whether they should advance on entry or take the risk of having penalties imposed which would involve the expense and delay of an appeal.

While Judge Waite declined to say what had influenced the collector of customs in Detroit in holding that the invoice prices did no represent full values, it is believed that the special treasury agents had found what they considered to be wholesale market values. It was said that much of the garden seed imported into this country comes from Germany, France and England, and is grown almost exclusively for exportation to the United States, there being little or no demand for seeds of the kind in those countries. Another factor influencing the finding is that in contracting for seeds, the personal responsibility and reputation of the foreign contractors is relied on, as inferior seeds imported and sold in this country would entail serious financial loss to the buyers.

PLANT NOTES.

The Paper White narcissus is one of our most valuable winter flowers and can be brought into bloom as early as November 1st, by starting the bulbs with a good watering in August. We do not force them under glass in California, as they bloom so freely outside that it does not pay. They multiply about three-fold each year and should be transplanted about every third or fourth season. I have seen a patch containing over one hundred thousand flowering bulbs on a piece of ground less than an acre in size. The price of bulbs has fallen so much here during the last few years that the finest could be had at from $2.50 to $3 per thousand this season. The price of the cut blooms will average about 50 cents per hundred during the season.

There is hardly any sale for any of the other varieties of white or yellow narcissus except at very low prices. I have found the Sir Watkin daffodil to be the best-paying variety we have grown during the last two seasons. It does not force as well as Trumpet Major or Princeps, but for an out-of-door sort it has no equal. The flowers are borne on very long stems, and are as large as single dahlias. The double Von Sion variety is not in demand in this vicinity, and there is very little profit in growing Trumpet Major unless they are flowered very early. Both the single and double Incomparable are extensively grown, but they do not bring much money, as they are both rather late blooming varieties.

Our freesias are up about six inches from the ground. We grow them entirely in flats, about two hundred bulbs to the box, and bring them inside when the cold weather begins, generally about December 1. A good succession of flowers can be had for several months if the bulbs are systematically planted. Freesias pay very well, for they are of the easiest culture and require but little heat and room. They wholesale at from $1 to $1.50 per hundred stems. Bulbs could be bought this season at $2 per thousand in Los Angeles.

No one in California pretends to force callas, as they are only a back-yard flower with us, and can only be sold for Easter decoration or Decoration Day shipments to some interior part of the country.

Gladioli pay fairly well, as they are a flower that can be grown in any old place, and, although cut spikes rarely wholesale for more than $2 per hundred they multiply so rapidly that if there is any sale for them at all it seems all profit. The Bride gladiolus flowers about the middle of April, when grown outside, and is one of our best selling varieties. The other sorts bloom from May until the end of October.

Ranunculus, anemones, ixias, sparaxis and crocus find no favor with the florists here, and are only grown as garden flowers.

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

Celery four feet tall and stalks of rhubarb four feet high and five inches thick will be exhibited at the World's Fair by Washington gardeners to show the capabilities of the soil and climate of the great northwestern state.

Four car loads of agaves that were planted in the university gardens at Notre Dame, Ind., were recently bought by the World's Fair management. Many of the plants are ten feet tall. They will be used by the landscape architect in beautifying the exposition grounds.

Joseph H. Hadkinson, superintendent of the outdoor planting for the agricultural department, has cut some Paul Neyron rose shoots from the World's Fair six-acre rose garden that were five feet long. These roses were planted last April.

RICHMOND, IND.—The Richmond Sketch Club opened its season October 27 with an exhibition at the Morrison-Reeves library, to which the E. G. Hill Co. sent a display of very fine chrysanthemum blooms.

This has been election week and genuine election weather, warm, sunny Indian summer. Comment as to the condition of the market seems unnecessary. The same conditions and prices as a week ago prevail except that violets are limited in supply and splendid in quality. They easily command $1.00 per hundred. The chrysanthemum torrent continues.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

We are experiencing what might be called Indian summer, and flowers are again showing that soft growth which is the cause of so much complaint. Business continues very good. The coming month will see several weddings which will call for the best quality of blooms obtainable.

There are not nearly enough 'mums to take care of the trade at present, and consequently good prices rule. The best Col. Appleton bring as high as $4 per dozen, that being the top price for 'mums so far this season. Bonnaillon is just coming in. Pink is scarce and fancy white are not plentiful. So far this season chrysanthemums have been doing remarkably well. I do not believe that as many 'mums are being grown this season as usual.

Carnations are again scarce. It is impossible to come anywhere near filling orders. With roses it is just the opposite. There is a very large supply, especially of Maids, and they can be bought at almost your own figures. They are short-stemmed stock. The extras usually find buyers without trouble. Red roses are not overly plentiful. Cincinnati is now better supplied with roses than at any time in its history.

Various Notes.

Several florists of this city are going to run over to Indianapolis to see the show next week. Judging from all reports this will be a great one this year.

Everything is ready for the chrysanthemum show of the Cincinnati Florists' Society, and a good exhibition is looked forward to. If you have not received a schedule you can get one by addressing Geo. Murphy.

A visit to J. A. Peterson's establishment found some very promising stock. His 'mums are very good, most of them being the latest varieties. Silver Wedding will be fine, and the Golden Wedding will be extra large flowers. Some Col. Appleton will be ready to cut in a few days. Carnations were a little backward, but in fine health, and will shortly be in with some very good blooms. Estelle was looking especially well with a large crop of long-stemmed blooms in sight. In roses Mr. Peterson grows Bride, Maid, Gate and Ivory. His Gates are especially fine, and Brides are in good crop. Of course Mr. Peterson's specialty, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, is to be seen in the finest kind of shape, and they are everywhere. Two large houses filled with larger plants will soon be in great shape. Already they are a mass of bloom. Adiantum Farleyense is also grown here in fine form and a house of this fern was a lovely sight. A large number of pandanuses of all sizes were also seen, besides cyclamen, dracaenas and other plants grown for the retail trade.

C. J. OHMER.

LIGNITE IN BRIQUETTES.

Apropos of Edward Reid's recent remarks before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, lignite has been used by the settlers on the treeless plains for years, and of late a number of railroad locomotives have been built especially to burn it. With the ordinary locomotives lignite produces too many sparks, but this difficulty has been overcome since proper grates have been constructed for using it. Another objection to lignite has been that by reason of rapid consumption it required extra work in stoking and had a tendency to clog the flues. All this has been obviated by the briquetting process which has been in use for some time in Germany.

Though a process has recently been perfected whereby it will not be necessary to introduce an outside substance as a "binder," the older ordinary form of briquetting is still in general use. The lignite is reduced to a powder, mixed with some other combustible and then pressed into briquettes. Sometimes the combustible is straw, but in any event, because lignite is exceedingly damp and has a tendency to slake on exposure to the air and contains so much sulphur, it has been found desirable to mix it with some more slowly-burning substance and then press it by powerful machinery to expel the moisture and check the tendency to slake. This has been accomplished with such success that in the northwest, at least, briquetted lignite will be acceptable for heating and steaming.

The system of mining lignite is novel, but with recent improvements this coal can be mined for about 40 cents a ton; by the time it is briquetted it costs a little more. This lignite in its crude state has been largely used on the western prairies for years. Experimenters in the briquetting process claim there is no doubt but that this coal in its finished state is likely in large part to take the place of the eastern product.

I THINK it only right and just to encourage you in your work of editing the best florists' paper in America, by saying that if I could only afford one paper it would be the REVIEW.—A. J. BOOTHMAN, Adams, Mass.

PLANTS FOR TABLE USES.

A friend of mine once entered a competition at a large show for six table plants. His plants were all first-class, and he seemed certain of gaining the first prize, when, lo and behold, the judges disqualified his exhibit because he had included a fern—a pretty, well-balanced plant of Pteris cretica albolineata in the regulation 5-inch pot, says a writer in the Gardening World. After that one feels inclined to ask the question, "What is a table plant?" Well, I maintain that a table plant is a well-balanced plant in a pot of 5 inches or less in diameter, whether a foliage or flowering plant or fern.

We are all acquainted with the stereotyped half-dozen table plants of our shows, which invariably include an Aralia Veitchii, Pandanus Veitchii, two crotons, and generally two dracenas; they, however, are hard to beat as foliage plants. The first named is a light and graceful plant; the second, with green and white foliage, is an ideal table plant. Some of the dracenas are very useful, such as Miss Glendinning, Mr. Freake, Salmonia, Aurantia and Goldiana, which make nice, well-balanced plants. The croton, when well grown to bring out the exquisite coloring, cannot be surpassed as a table plant, the variety is so great and the coloring so rich and telling. Among the best, with narrow, graceful leaves, may be mentioned Golden Ring (a superb variety), Golden Gem, Warrenii, Picturata, Aigburth Gem, Her Majesty, Mrs. Dorman, Mrs. McLeod, Weismannii and Hawkeri.

A splendid table plant is Panax Victoræ, with green and white leaves, making a light and elegant plant. Panax plumosa is a green variety, and makes a well-balanced plant. Evodia elegans is another neat green-leaved plant; Asparagus plumosus nanus, Chirita asparagoides, Maranta major, Maranta lutea, and Cyperus alternifolius variegatus are a few more suitable subjects from the stove. Many of the palms are useful in their early stage, the best being Cocos Weddelliana and plumosa, Kentia Belmoreana and Forsteriana, and some of the caryotas, especially sobolifera.

Some of the berry-bearing plants are very effective. Mention may be made of Ardisia crenulata, a scarlet-berried plant which retains its berries all the year around; Solanum crispum, a well-known plant, and Calicarpa purpurea, with long, slender branches laden with small purple berries in mid-winter. Among the hardier green-leaved plants that do well in a cool greenhouse may be mentioned Aralia Sieboldii, Draena congesta, D. Haageana, D. rubra, D. australis, Carex japonica variegata, Eulalia japonica, Grevillea robusta and Abutilon Savitzii, all making nice, evenly balanced plants. One objection to ferns in, say, 5-inch pots is that they are usually too dense for table work, though, of course, there are exceptions, and the varieties of the Pteris cretica, Pteris tremula, Adiantum cuneatum, A. c. grandiceps and A. c. gracillimum make good shapely plants, and would look well on a large table.

Where flowering plants are wanted, during the winter months for table work nothing can be better than the winter flowering begonias, which can be flowered in almost any size of pot. Some of the best are Gloire de Lorraine, the white variety, Caledonia, Corallina and Ideala, Acalypha hispida, Gardenia radicans, Euphorbia jacquiniæflora, Poinsettia pulcherrima, with its bright scarlet bracts, ericas in variety, Aphelandra aurantiaca, Roezii, with a flower spike much resembling a miniature Lobelia cardinalis, Calanthe Veitchii, Clerodendron fallax, and nutans, the white variety, and Cattleya Bowringiana.

For low-growing plants, for use in saucers, which are often very useful and effective, some of the selaginellas are well adapted, such as S. apoda, S. Kraussiana, and S. Kraussiana aurea; Nertera depressa, a delightful little plant when covered with its scarlet berries, and Panicum variegatum, as small plants in thumb-pots, can be made into miniature groups on a large table. The most suitable subjects for the purpose are crotons, which will need to be kept plunged in boxes well up to the light tops of well-colored coleus, which root very quickly; Asparagus plumosus and A. Sprengeri seedlings, Pteris serrulata and cretica, Adiantum cuneatum seedlings, Panax Victoræ, dracenas in variety, and Caladium argyrites and C. erubescens minus. When calanthes are used they should be flanked with asparagus or Adiantum cuneatum to hide the bare stems, which combination produces a charming effect as a centerpiece in a silver bowl.

MEDIA, PA.—Jerome Harley, of Village View, is adding two new greenhouses to his plant.

CHARLESTON, ILL.—After two firms had failed in the flower business here, Miss Etta J. Nott started in eight years ago and has built up a very prosperous trade, producing part of her supplies under 3,500 feet of glass. She has been having an "opening" this week and entertained many visitors.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—There is no commercial glass in this locality. What few flowers are grown here are produced either outdoors or under lath. American Beauty and many other roses grow to perfection under these conditions, except for about two months, January and February, when we depend on Los Angeles. Ream Brothers say that nursery business only awaits a more uniform water supply, the building of the Tinto dam.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL, BY WM. SCOTT.

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business, and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold. Following we print a few extracts from letters received from buyers of the book:

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.
GEORGE M. KELLOGG.
Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual," was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere bagatelle.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to aid a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive era of the florists' business.

Madison, N. J. A. J. BAUR.

If everyone has enjoyed your book as I have it's a successful publication. It is different from our usual horticultural works, being plain and concise—just what one wants.
Flushing, N. Y. H. D. DARLINGTON.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles alone in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same.

The Market.

Business has been very quiet during the past week. There has been a great scarcity of funeral work among the stores that generally have their hands full at this time of the year. There have been several weddings, but on the whole everything is flat in the stores. The weather has been so warm and bright that flowers are still very low in price. Carnations are good and very cheap. Portia, Scott, Joost and Crocker can be had in any quantity at from 15 to 20 cents per dozen wholesale. Lawson, Hill, Estelle, Prosperity, Crane, Triumph and other good sellers do not bring over 25 cents per dozen, and fancy stock can be had about three dozen for a dollar. Roses are fairly plentiful, and of good size and color, but the prices remain about the same as they have been for the last month. Chrysanthemums are a glut, and can be had for almost any price offered. This is outdoor-grown stock; the greenhouse flowers are considerably cheaper than they were last week. The best whites and yellows can be had at from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen and small flowers much cheaper. Violets have come down in price during the last week. They wholesale at 75 cents per dozen bunches. Owing to the continued warm weather they do not keep very well, but as soon as we have some rain they will make a much better appearance.

Notes.

Miss Montpelier, associated for several years with the Misses Worn, has started in business for herself as a decorator. She has formed a partnership with Miss Wallenberg, of Berkeley.

The chrysanthemum show at San Rafael during the past week was a very fine exhibit, and well attended. The cup for the finest white variety shown was awarded to Martin Miller. Paul Ackerman won both the second and third prizes.

Much interest is felt among the gardening fraternity regarding the Scottish bowling green at Golden Gate park. John McLaren, the superintendent, is an enthusiastic advocate of the sport, but luck was against him on Sunday last, and he met his defeat in the final game. His opponent, Wallace Cook, is also a

S. J. Long began in the florists' business here ten years ago. His friends tried to dissuade him, by saying a man would starve to death growing flowers up here, but he has steadily added to his plant each year. Mr. Long has now changed the name of his firm, and will do business as The Northern Michigan Floral Co. He has five houses, the average length of which is seventy-five feet, and is erecting another rose house 18x100 and a show and fern house combined 24x32. He contemplates a new Furman No. 8 heater. There is not an inch of the plant that Mrs. Long does not understand, often taking full charge. She is a good maker-up, doing all the party, wedding and funeral work. The plant is said to be the largest north of Grand Rapids and both the local and shipping trade is steadily increasing.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres. F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

PROF. L. C. CORBETT, in American Gardening, endorses a recent recommendation of the ginkgo as a street tree.

THE Greening Bros. Nursery Co., at Monroe, Mich., has put in a switch from the Michigan Central. Last spring they shipped over a million peach trees.

D. J. MUNCY is proprietor of the Llano Estacado Nursery, about five miles from Floydada, Tex. He has about 200,000 apple, peach and plum ready for delivery this fall.

STURGEON BAY, WIS.—The season's output of evergreen trees for Christmas promises to be not so large as usual, with a strong demand, and the dealers are well supplied with orders.

THIS is the open season for nursery stock in Canada and quite a little stock has gone north, with still larger quantities to follow in the spring. Fumigation is required at the port of entry.

J. H. HALE, orchardist, nurseryman and president of the American Pomological Society, addressed the Rhode Island Horticultural Society at Providence, October 22, on "The New England Fruit Growers' Opportunity." He said there is in this country a market for twice the quantity of apples now produced and that the European market is right at the hand of the New Englander.

THE HILL PLANS.

The reports of the attempts of the E. G. Hill Company to acquire, by exchange or purchase, a tract of city property adjoining their own at Richmond, Ind., has given rise to many rumors as to the firm's intention which might well be set at rest. Fred H. Lemon, while in Chicago recently, stated that there is no truth in the report that the failure of the negotiations with the city may lead to their removal from Richmond. He says they have no such thought. Their proposition to the city was to exchange some property, held under option and adjoining one side of the city property, for a tract of unused city land adjoining the Hill property, a suitable sum of money being paid to equalize any difference in values. The deal seemed well on the way to consummation when a political division took place on the question in the council, and the newspapers, blocking the plan. Then it was that a Richmond newspaper made the unauthorized statement that if additional room for development could not be obtained, the greenhouses might be removed from Richmond.

Mr. Lemon states that the plan was to erect a large range of cut flower houses, the present plant not being large enough to afford scope for the talents of the several ambitious members of the firm. He says that the general plan has by no means been abandoned, the intention being to materially widen the lines on which they operate, but the failure to secure the desired land will probably delay expansion for a season or so.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

We have been having ideal summer weather for the past week, and outdoor flowers are still in evidence to such an extent that the florists have not had the usual demand for stock. Most of the chrysanthemum growers are sending in fine stock, but the prices realized are not up to last year, and the demand from a retailer's view is not as good as in past years.

All of the down-town stores were decorated on Saturday with farm produce, corn stalks, pumpkins and fruits, and were very attractive.

The rose and carnation growers are all impatiently waiting for the chrysanthemum season to pass, as that stock is hard to move.

ROCKFORD, ILL.

The exhibit of chrysanthemums at the Buckbee greenhouse this afternoon, says the Star of October 31, will give the people of Rockford an opportunity to see one of the finest exhibits of these flowers in the United States. The exhibition is free and this afternoon from 1 to 5 o'clock the greenhouse will be open for all who wish to look at the assortment of blooms before the selections are made for the exhibit for the New York show.

The Buckbee 'mums last year pretty nearly swept the deck at the big shows and this year there is a better assortment than ever. Nearly a carload will be sent to New York and among them will be some new varieties that promise well. One is called the Rockford and was hybridized here. It scored 89 points at the recent show in Chicago. It is a handsome yellow, incurved bloom. Another new variety is the Mrs. H. W. Buckbee that scored 91 points at the same show. It is a white bloom of great beauty.

The Buckbees have another new one, a yellow blossom, which has not yet been named and which looks like a winner. It will be shown for the first time at the New York show.

The Buckbee 'mums will be shown at the exhibits at Fort Smith, Ark., and Joliet November 5 and at New York and Indianapolis November 9. Viewed by the experience of last season there should be a large winning of premiums on the blooms from the Forest City.

More carnations are sold in Canton than any other flower. Scott, Hill, Lawson Prosperity and Roosevelt are the popular sorts. C. B.

NOTICE.

THE ROSE is, and will continue to be, the leading flower. Very many are grown and cultivated for our Northern market, but few that will stand our rigorous climate. I have been watching the Rose and have had a great deal of experience with it for many years. My object now is to get up a company, at as light expense as possible, and grow all the leading varieties that are perfectly hardy. The price will be a great object as well as good stock. The place where I will locate will be where we can grow No 1 stock the first year; that is, in one year. There will be no potting, no firing, no coal to pay for. The cuttings will be grown outdoors. We shall also grow Gardenias in bush form like the imported Azaleas. The fragrance of the Gardenia will put all other flowers in the shade, to a certain extent. The Camellia is a nice bushy plant and ought to be in every collection. NOW, my plan is, to form a stock company of members of the craft each to subscribe so much for the first year. All parties wishing to take up shares will get full particulars by applying to

THE CYPRESS MARKET.

The cypress market may be said to be weak. Although no price concessions are offered on the best grade of lumber, a reduction of $1.50 to $2 per thousand feet is made on the second grade, which is not suitable for greenhouse use, and there are plenty of salesmen out looking for orders on the best air-dried clear stock, something which has not been known for years. Several southern mills, which have heretofore been supposed to sell through the trust, are opening offices in Chicago, and everything indicates an anxiety for orders, which will certainly head off the rise in price which has been an annual event for the past few seasons, if it does not bring about an actual reduction. However, cheaper cypress will not mean a perceptible reduction on small greenhouses, for the builders have not in the last two or three years raised their prices in the same ratio that material and labor has advanced.

FRENCH "CHRYSANTHEMISTES."

The Chrysanthemum Society of France will hold its eighth congress at Lille, November 6 to 8. The society has 723 members and among the distinguished persons whose names appear on the list is "M. Elmer D. Smith, nurseryman, Adrian, Mich." There is a list of essays on both practical and purely scientific topics, and provision is made on the program for visiting the establishments of several near-by growers. Of course there will be a large exhibition at the same time. The floral committee judged several new sorts on October 13, most notable of which was Calvat's Amateur Conseil, which scored 90 points. It is an incurved Japanese, rose with bronze reverse, and most strikingly effective. The secretary of the society is M. Philippe Rivoire, 16 Rue d'Algerie, Lyon.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

State of Trade.

During the past month there was a good demand for both roses and carnations, and the supply was ample and of good quality. Beauties also, were in good demand, and up till two weeks ago the supply was plentiful. They are now rather scarce, but quality good. Since 'mums became plentiful the demand for both roses and carnations has somewhat fallen off. Roses are plentiful and of excellent quality, carnations are also plentiful and for the season are of a high grade. Prices have ruled fair.

'Mums are nearly "the whole thing" just now, and the display by the various growers, in size, color and finish, is much beyond the usual. The demand is brisk and prices good. Violets are as yet scarce and poor, the warm spell having injured them considerably.

Various Notes.

At the Dunkley establishment roses and carnations are looking well, and give promise of a heavy cut by holiday time.

Sam Batson is highly pleased with his prospects and reports a smaller percentage of stem-rot this year. He still grows carnations exclusively. The postal routes having been reorganized, he is now on Route 11, R. F. D.

At Van Bochoves' roses are, as usual, the prime attraction, their Beauties and Meteors being especially fine. They have planted their entire new range to carnations, which are evidently thoroughly suited with their handsome quarters. Among the varieties are to be found a large proportion of last year's introductions. A particular feature of their place is a house of callas which is really splendid. They express themselves as being satisfied with the prospects and are confident that with their large increase and other modern improvements they are in a better position to handle their customers than they ever were before.

The Central Michigan Nursery Co.'s greenhouses are now in charge of A. J. Smith, a gentleman from New York state. He has recently reorganized his working staff and has imported a lot of eastern talent.

The weather during the month has been ideal. R.

GROWERS ALL OVER THE COUNTRY WRITE SIMILAR LETTERS

OSSINING, N. Y.
I have used your FUMIGATING POWDER for some years and I have always found it first-class; there is no danger of it killing anything except the green fly, which it does with dispatch. I never use anything else for insecticide, nor do I wish anything better.
Yours truly,
C. BARSON.

BATH, ME.
We use your Fumigating Powder and we are never troubled with aphids; it does not harm the blooms in the least, and we find it the cheapest way to fumigate—and we have tried everything that is on the market.

Yours truly,
JOHN H. RAMSEY & CO.

NORTHAMPTON INSANE HOSPITAL, MASS.
After using your Fumigating Powder I must say that in fifteen years' experience with various methods of killing aphids, I find this the most effectual and economical method I have yet tried.

Yours respectfully,
GEORGE W. THORNILY.

BAYSIDE, N. Y.
I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.

Yours truly,
WM. BELL.

We will mail at your request our booklet telling about the FUMIGATING KIND TOBACCO POWDER. We guarantee satisfaction or money back. Free trial bags for the asking. THE H. A. STOOHOFF CO., Tobacco Powder Hobbyists, 118 West St., New York.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The cut flower business has taken a little jump in the right direction since the outdoor supply has been cut off. Wednesday night, October 28, brought with it a heavy dew, followed by killing frosts which finished all outdoor flowers. From all reports, violets seem to be shortening up considerably all over the eastern cities and in this city, the home of the wearers of the blue, violets are in good demand, selling at $1.50 per 100 and not enough to go around.

Roses are coming in better and the demand for them is increasing slowly, as chrysanthemums seem to hold the lead and are coming in better grades than last week. Among the larger ones Col. D. Appleton and Maj. Bonaffon are coming in, also a few Timothy Eaton were seen this week. Some small plants are also to be had at 35 cents each. Carnations have been selling well at 50 cents per dozen, but for some unknown reason one or two places have been selling them at 25 cents per dozen, special.

The growers are busy getting in the outdoor bulbs and roots before the cold weather sets in and are also looking forward to the coming exhibition, November 10 to 12, in which there is over $400 in cash prizes, two silver cups, two silver medals, one bronze medal, one ton of coal, one parlor lamp, one silver fruit dish, one mirror and a box of good cigars. The ladies' committee of the Florence Crittenden Mission has most kindly consented to act in conjunction with members of the New Haven County Horticultural Society, with the object of making the exhibition a thorough success, by assisting in the sale of tickets and taking an active part in other work during the exhibition, for which the society agrees to give one-third of the net profit.

S. H. W.

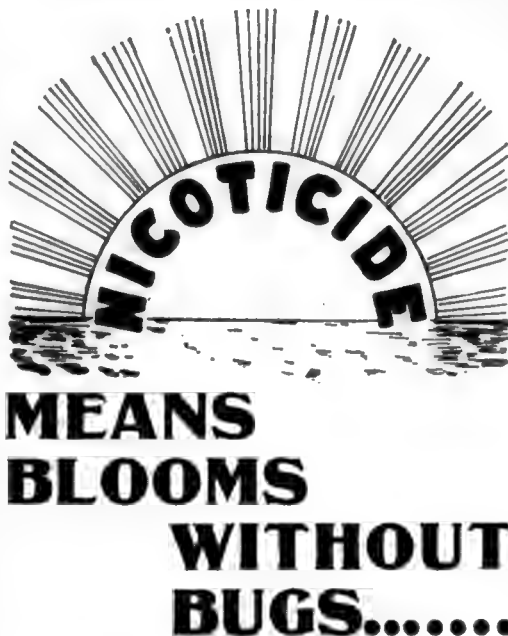

PEORIA, ILL.

The corn carnival at Peoria has just closed, after a fairly successful two weeks' run. The exhibition was considered very fine. These carnivals are held for the purpose of helping the local merchants, but the florists, and many others, denounce the carnivals and street fairs as a detriment to trade; our experience has been a loss of business.

J. C. Murray is still on the sick list, but improving slowly.

A killing frost a week ago has made the bulb trade boom.

TOLEDO, O.—At the Scottwood Greenhouse the chrysanthemum show is attracting many visitors and Manager Magee is well pleased with trade.

AL RANDALL

19 and 21
Randolph St., CHICAGO.

Wholesale Florist.

WHY SHOULD WE NOT LOOK FOR YOUR ORDERS?

Is not 14 years of constantly furnishing the best the market affords a sufficient guarantee that we will still continue?

We now have an acre, more or less, of floor space and, with your orders, we hope to double it in a short time.

We can now, without any hesitation, claim the foremost rank as a shipping commission house, and always at your service.

Hoping to get your Thanksgiving Orders as early as possible, I remain, as ever,
Your obedient servant,

A. L. RANDALL, 19 and 21 Randolph St., CHICAGO.

E. C. AMLING

WANTS YOUR BUSINESS.

A considerable number of buyers have found that with us they can depend on getting the most satisfactory service in wholesale cut flowers, but we would like to impress upon others the fact that we can serve them also, and serve them well.

In seven years of business-like dealing we have gained and held the loyal support of some of the very best growers for the Chicago market. We have large supplies at all times, in all grades wanted.

Beauties, Fine Tea Roses, Carnations, in fact everything seasonable. Plenty Violets.

Chrysanthemums for all needs, including the best exhibition stock.

Best Cattleyas, Choicest Valley.

Adiantum and an unlimited supply of Asparagus, Smilax and Sprengeri.

While it is business for every day that we seek, we want to call the attention of the trade to the fact that this is the place to look for anything out of the ordinary requirements. We have, and always aim to have, besides the stock to be found in the ordinary commission house, various seasonable specialties to be found nowhere but here.

We cater especially to the shipping trade, finding it to give a steadiness to demand in times of large supply which compensates for the effort necessary to meet requirements in time of scarcity. Our space is large, our facilities adequate to all needs in the line of prompt service and the experience of our employes is a guarantee of careful selection, packing and shipment.

Try our service for Thanksgiving.

THE EXHIBITIONS

NEW YORK.

The second annual exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, held in co-operation with the American Institute, is on this week in New York city, held in the grandest room which has ever been available for a flower show. It is in the new Herald Square hall, at the top of the Macy building, Broadway, between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets, and the space of over 70,000 square feet is well filled.

The doors were opened promptly at the scheduled hour, and the management was at once in receipt of congratulations on the complete success of the exhibition, for the general effect was excellent, the showing of high grade novelties the grandest ever staged in this country, and the early attendance most gratifyingly large. All that was needed from the opening hour was good weather to insure a most pleasing outcome.

Probably the center of interest was the contest for the silver cup offered by the C. S. A. for the best ten blooms of any variety. It brought out a wonderful lot of flowers, but none was equal to the new pink, Wm. Duckham, exhibited by Mr. Duckham himself. The F. R. Pierson silver cup for best twenty-five blooms in twenty-five varieties was also won by Mr. Duckham, his set including many of the new sorts, described in recent chrysanthemum notes in the REVIEW. A. Herrington won the Pierson cup for twelve blooms of twelve varieties with many of the novelties in his set. These two were the principal prize winners, Mr. Herrington capturing fourteen firsts and four seconds, Mr. Duckham ten firsts and two seconds. F. R. Pierson Co. was first on its new pink 'mum, Dr. Englehardt.

There were fine bush plants of chrysanthemums from the Boston gardeners. Lager & Hurrell make a very fine display of orchids. Pompon chrysanthemums are shown by R. Vincent, Jr. & Son, White Marsh, Md. Julius Roehrs staged a fine group of decorative plants. John Lewis Childs showed crotons and plants. There are evergreens from Siebrecht & Son and box trees from Bobbink & Atkins.

A good showing of carnations is made by such growers as C. H. Allen, J. J. Hayden, L. H. Marquisee, J. N. May and Peter Fisher. Violets came from G. T. Schuneman. The rose exhibitors were Mitchell, Noe, McArthur, May, Williams and Adams. New roses were shown by John Breitmeyer's Sons, J. N. May and John Cook. H. T. Clinkaberry shows cyripediums. Mr. Wells, the English chrysanthemum grower, sent an exhibit of twenty novelties.

Among the best blooms shown, taking the exhibits as a whole, are Wm. Duckham, the grand pink; Eaton, white and yellow; Col. Appleton in fine form and F. A. Cobbold, one of the novelties. Among the exhibitors from a distance are E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.; Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich.; H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind. The trade visitors include all the principal chrysanthemum growers in the country.

The judges were: Eugene Dailedouze, Prof. Nicholson, Edwin Lonsdale, Wm. Turner and Elmer D. Smith.

PHILADELPHIA.

Beautiful weather greeted the opening of the great Philadelphia flower show on Tuesday evening, drawing a large crowd of flower lovers to Horticultural Hall. They found a grand collection of plants and cut blooms of chrysanthemums that deserved careful examination. The larger sized chrysanthemum plants were numerous. They were, as a rule, rather stockier than usual, with an abundance of well-formed flowers of good substance and size. They nearly filled the main hall, being grouped about a Japanese temple, which was arranged with arches and supported by columns, a temple of chrysanthemums, ferns, autumn leaves and red Japanese lanterns, put together in William Graham's best style. Some fine specimens of Areca lutescens were along the walls and at one end two splendid crotons in tubs, the broad-leaved Queen Victoria yielding the blue ribbon to Superbus. A specimen Rhapis flabelliformis in a big tub was much admired. Near by was another of Cycas Siamensis, not often seen. In ferns John H. Ley had his challenge exhibit of Adiantum hybridum in good form. Thomas Long has being crowded into the lower hall, with the vegetables. Secretary Rust stated that exhibitors and experts agreed in praising the exhibition. All seemed well pleased. PHIL.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The fourteenth annual chrysanthemum show opened November 10 with the grandest display of cut blooms and plants ever seen in this city. Never before were such uniformly fine blooms on exhibition here, and since the last show two years ago there certainly has been a great improvement in the 'mum. Those large and gorgeous Australians are almost beyond description, but they are having a hard tussle in their endeavor to displace our own Eatons and Appleton, and a few others. Perhaps the grandest show in the hall are two big vases of equally big Appleton done to perfection, one by Mrs. Vesey and the other by the E. G. Hill Co. They received first and second in the order named, but it took some fine judging to decide between them. We have three good judges, though, in the persons of Messrs. Buettner and Wienhoeber, of Chicago, and Theo. Bock, of Hamilton, Ohio.

H. W. Rieman has several seedlings and they are laying the other varieties out in good shape. Consequently Henry wears that "smile that won't come off." H. W. Buckbee, of Rockford, is here with some grand stock. The mossed banks were introduced at this show and the blooms show up fine this way. Especially is this way effective with those large, reflexed Australians, with their long and spreading petals. Bare necks some grand specimens, for which he is famous.

To return to chrysanthemums, the cut flowers were shown in great profusion. The largest single bloom was said to be John Mitchell's Madame Carnot, which was apparently a record-breaker. The best three vases were Colonel Appleton, yellow; Nellie Pockett, white, and Marie Liger, pink, all from William Robertson. There is a nice collection of orchids, also many fine decorative plants and evergreens.

The show is very large, many foliage plants and the hardy chrysanthemums do not detract from the beauty of the blooms as they do when in vases. While we do not like to see varieties with good foliage shown in this way, there is no doubt that for many varieties this method is to be preferred. Among the older varieties we notice Morel and it looms up better than ever. A vase of this variety shown by Mrs. Vesey carried off the prize in the pink class, H. W. Rieman's seedling running a close second.

There is very close competition in the classes calling for six blooms each of the various colors, and many vases that are well worthy of a first prize will be turned down. Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, is here with some great stock, and so is G. R. Gause, from Richmond. N. Smith & Son are upholding their reputation as one of the strongest competitors in the business. Alvin Schreiber, of Bertermann's, is showing some fine stock.

The orchid display is attracting crowds and it is well placed in the center of the hall, so that people can walk all around it. The 'mum plants are hardly up to the high standard we are used to at our shows, but they are not bad. Vaughan's Golden Chain attracts the crowds continually, while his other plants are also fine. The display of plants is also less extensive than usual. The groups of single stems are sadly lacking in number, quality high, however. J. Hartje has some single-stemmed plants that are superb, good foliage and large blooms. E. Huckreide is also showing fine stock in these classes.

H. W. Rieman is showing some fine Lorraines and cyclamens. There is a nice exhibit from W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., of their golden privet and a nice pink 'mum.

Tomlinson hall has been remodeled during the past summer and with the fine decorations it shows up prettier than ever. Ed Bertermann deserves much credit for the arrangement of the decorations and the displays.

The Smith & Young Co. is showing a fine lot of violets and there is also a fine lot from Swan Peterson, of Gibson City, Ill.

The weather is fine and the low railroad rates has brought many visitors to the city and this show will certainly be a financial success.

Among the visitors are, besides the judges, E. G. Hill, of Richmond; Mrs.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The fifth annual exhibition of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held in the Music Hall, Tarrytown, N. Y., November 4 to 6 and was quite up to the high standard of former years. The competition in both plants and cut blooms was keen and in many of the classes very close. The only falling off was in bush chrysanthemum plants and in a number of groups of chrysanthemum plants. No doubt the C. S. A. show to be held in New York the next week made some of Mrs. Geo. Lewis, Tarrytown; and Wm. Scott, gardener to Joseph Eastman, Tarrytown.

In the cut bloom classes the most noticeable of the newer varieties were Lord Salisbury, Mrs. Thirkell, Chas. Longley, Durban's Pride, Millicent Richardson, Queen Alexandra, W. R. Church, Mrs. G. Mileham and Yellow Eaton.

For the largest bloom in the show, two Madam Carnot, one Lord Salisbury and one Mrs. Thirkell were put up, Lord Salisbury winning out, the overhead measurement being twenty-three inches. The flower, though a little light in color, was well finished and full centered.

Some of the older varieties prominently shown were: J. R. Upton, T. Carrington, Mrs. Weeks, Col. D. Appleton, Kate Broomhead, Merza, Golden Wedding and Mutual Friend.

Among the commercial exhibitors were F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, showing Beauty roses and several promising seedling chrysanthemums. Main & Fear, of Gloversville, N. Y., showed a good vase of assorted carnations, and John E. Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., showed a number of seedling carnations of merit, prominent among which was a clear yellow of good form and stem, named Star of Bethlehem. In new carnations, the most prominently shown were Gov. Wolcott, Harlowarden, Enchantress and J. H. Manley, while in the old varieties Mrs. Lawson and Prosperity were most in evidence.

The first premiums on plants and cut flowers:

David McFarlane, gardener for Mrs. Walter Webb, Scarborough, was first on group to cover seventy-five square feet; on thirty-six carnations; on twelve white carnations.

Howard Nicola, gardener to Mrs. J. B. Trevor, Yonkers, was first on group of foliage plants; on specimen fern; on Adiantum Farleyense; on twelve Beauties; on twelve Brides; on single violets; on table centerpiece.

W. C. Roberts, gardener to Frederick Potter, Ossining, was first on bush plant, white, yellow and "any other color"; on two distinct varieties; on six cyclamens.

Wm. Scott, gardener to Joseph Eastman, Tarrytown, was first on twelve single-stemmed plants; on six table plants; on six table ferns; on three specimen ferns; on selaginella and lycopodiums; on adiantum other than Farleyense; on twelve chrysanthemum blooms, distinct varieties.

George Middleton, gardener to Wm. Rockefeller, was first on thirty-six chrysanthemum blooms in six varieties; on twenty-five in distinct varieties; on twelve Bridesmaids; on twelve pink carnations.

J. S. Wahlquist, gardener to J. D. Archbold, was first on six white chrysanthemum blooms.

Wm. Nye, gardener to Miss Blanche Potter, Ossining, was first for six blooms, yellow, pink and crimson; on twelve Perle and twelve Liberty.

John Henry, gardener to Samuel Goodman, was first on twenty-five chrysanthemum blooms arranged for effect.

Robert Allen, gardener to E. C. Benedict, Greenwich, Conn., was first on eighteen carnations; on twelve scarlet and twelve variegated.

Richard Langle, White Plains, was first on double and on single violets.

John Johnson, gardener to B. S. Clark, Greenwich, Conn., was first on double violets in the gardener's class.

James Ballantyne, gardener for Mrs. George Lewis, Tarrytown, was first on palms.

Samuel Untermeyer was first on foliage plant.

There was also a good showing of fruits and vegetables. The silver medal for new decorative plant went to Samuel Untermeyer, the Pierson silver cup for display of chrysanthemums to Wm. Scott, as did the prize for table of decorative plants, for Asparagus Sprengeri and for largest bloom in the show. The Pierson prize for Nephrolepis Piersoni went to S. Untermeyer and Samuel Riddle had the best Lorraine begonia. John Henry had the best grown plant other than fern and L. A. Martin the best pompon chrysanthemums.

Certificates were awarded to J. Breitmeyer's Sons, Detroit, for seedling rose; to Geo. N. Hay, for seedling carnation; to J. E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., for car-

Schray, of St. Louis; G. Teilmann and wife, of Marion; H. W. Buckbee and wife, of Rockford; O. Benthey and H. Heller, of Newcastle, and several others. A partial list of the awards follows:

the boys hold back some of their best plants.

W. C. Roberts, gardener to Fred Potter, Ossining, N. Y., was the principal exhibitor in bush plants, and David McFarlane, gardener to Mrs. H. Walter Webb, Scarborough, N. Y., put up a very neat group, the plants being finely foliaged and blooms well finished.

The principal exhibitors in plants were H. Nicols, gardener to Mrs. J. B. Trevor, Yonkers; Samuel Untermeyer, Yonkers; James Ballantyne, gardener to nation Star of Bethlehem; to Main & Fear, Gloversville, for carnations; to F. R. & P. M. Pierson, for Beauties; to F. R. Pierson for carnation Daheim.

The judges were William Turner, Oceanic, N. J.; James G. McNicoll, Cedarhurst, N. Y.; Patrick O'Mara, New York City; Peter McDonald, Yonkers, N. Y.; Thomas Harrison, Glen Cove, N. Y.; M. J. Connelian, Bayshore, N. Y.

MADISON, N. J.

The eighth annual show of the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society was held here on November 5 and 6 and proved to be the most successful yet held by that society. The attendance on the second day was gratifying and the quality and quantity of the exhibits left nothing to be desired. In the chrysanthemum classes were seen many of the novelties and some exceptionally fine varieties were noted. In the class for thirty-six flowers, six varieties, the two ancient rivals, William Duckham and Arthur Herrington, put up a grand competition, the first named scoring first, with splendid vases of Maynell, Ben Wells, Thirkell, F. S. Vallis, Mrs. G. Mileham and Mrs. Weeks. The most conspicuous of Mr. Herrington's lot were the Eatons, H. J. Jones and Appleton.

For eighteen flowers, three varieties, Peter Duff, gardener to J. Crosby Brown, won an easy first with splendid flowers of Merza, T. Carrington and Nellie Pockett. Mr. Duff also got first for twelve flowers in four varieties with A. Herrington second, and he also won first for ten white, with Merza.

For ten yellow A. Herrington was first, with Yellow Eaton, and also first for ten Appleton and ten Eaton, all splendid vases. Six flowers any variety first went to W. F. Thomas and for ten flowers in five varieties was captured by Peter Duff, with Mr. Thomas second. Mr. Duff got another first on six pink, with fine Balfour, O. Kock scoring second. Six white was won by O. Kock, and six yellow by C. H. Totty, with Lord Salisbury.

Six Appleton gave Peter Duff another first, as did also six "any other variety," W. H. Hand running second in each case. Mr. Hand got first on the vase for effect, with Geo. Bird second. In the class for pompons conditions were reversed and Geo. Bird got first, with Mr. Hand second.

The competition in the rose classes was worthy of the rose city, eight, nine and ten exhibitors showing in each class, and the quality was very fine. For eighteen Beauties and twelve Beauties, L. A. Noe was first and L. M. Noe was second in each case.

For twenty-five Maids L. A. Noe was first, L. M. Noe second, and Mrs. R. B. Holmes third. For twenty-five Brides L. A. Noe was first, Henry Hentz second, and L. M. Noe third. For twelve Maids Brant Bros., Utica, N. Y., were first, L. A. Noe second, and Mrs. R. B. Holmes third. For twelve Brides L. A. Noe was first, C. G. Cook second and Brant Bros. third.

One exhibitor, J. T. Wagner, of Chatham, would have been easily first in several classes, but owing to the fact that he staged more flowers in each instance than the schedule called for, he was disqualified.

In carnations Wm. Duckham got first with very fine vases of Enchantress, Mrs. Bradt and Gov. Roosevelt. In violets W. H. Thomas got first for the doubles and Peter Duff for the singles.

View of the Madison, N. J., Exhibition Last Week.

For the groups of plants H. L. Hand was first, W. H. Thomas second and S. Herremans third.

For three specimen chrysanthemum plants Peter Duff was first, with very well finished pots of Balfour, Garza and Molatsch. Mr. Duff was also first for one specimen plant and for twelve 6-inch pot plants.

The medals offered by Moore, Hentz & Nash to the actual growers of the flowers were won this year by Samuel Redstone, foreman for William Duckham, and Joseph Rusicka, foreman for L. A. Noe. This awarding medals to the actual growers of the flowers might well be followed by other societies, offering, as it does, an incentive to the grower to do the best he knows how.

In the vegetable classes Messrs. Coombes and Downing and Herremans were conspicuous.

A certificate was awarded W. Duckham for a stand of new mums, some of the finest being W. Duckham, Cheltoni, Mary Inglis, Maynell, Henry Barnes, Ben Wells, F. A. Cobbold and Mildred Ware. This is the first time any of these varieties have been exhibited in the east and enthusiasts hovered around them notebook in hand, W. Duckham being a favorite with everyone.

Certificates were awarded to John N. May for Bride carnation and seedling No. 45 chrysanthemum. Also to the Breitmeyer rose, which was very well received by the rose men generally.

Wm. Duckham was recognized for a splendid plant of Ficus pandurata and Acalypha Sanderiana, and A. Herrington for a splendid plant of Caryota urens, two Cocos plumosa (undoubtedly the two finest plants in the country), and a grand specimen of Pierson fern.

Mrs. R. B. Holmes set up a vase of President Carnot rose that was really splendid. As grown at that establishment Carnot is a fine paying rose and Mr. Gary, the foreman, can shake hands with himself.

Lager & Hurrell were given a certificate for a table of orchids, among which were Cypripedium insigne Sanderæ and other rarities.

M. Tilden made a splendid exhibit of Beauties and Dr. McAlpin, of Morristown, showed Bridesmaid very well done.

John Haines, of Bethlehem, Pa., sent a half dozen seedling carnations, Star of Bethlehem being perhaps the best of the lot. A certificate was awarded him, and also to F. R. Pierson for carnations Daheim and Mrs. M. A. Patten.

E. Jenkins and A. H. Wingett, or Lenox, Mass., with William Turner, of Oceanic, N. J., were the judges and their work showed careful and accurate judgment.

Taken generally, the show was very fine and in quality will hardly be equaled in the country. B.

JOLIET, ILL.

The second annual flower show, November 5 to 7, in point of exhibition and attendance was a great success, and financially there will be a little surplus to go into the treasury. The principal exhibitors were the Chicago Carnation Company, the J. D. Thompson Carnation Company, the E. G. Hill Company, Nathan Smith & Son, H. W. Buckbee, Joseph Labo, Carter, Johnson & Goranson, Colonel Lambert, George Kuhl, Vaughn's greenhouses and George Wittbold Company. But there were many others. We should also mention the school exhibits, four of them, also the Illinois State Penitentiary, William Tip-lady, gardener, put up a fine group of plants not for competition.

Nathan Smith & Son captured first prize for forty varieties of 'mums, with the Hill company a close second and Buckbee third. Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., was first on twelve white, twelve pink and twelve yellow. In plants Vaughan sent six and got more firsts than Buckbee. The latter's were well grown, large flowered, bushy plants, but not large enough to compete against the other plants, which were also well grown. Kuhl was first on Piersoni and Boston ferns.

The carnations were not very strong, only the two local firms exhibiting. There were only five classes open to them. The Chicago Carnation Company was easily first on the best vase, any color, with Fiancee, also first on pink. The Thompson company got first on white and red. Medals were awarded, Fiancee winning the gold one. The others were silver. Fiancee also won the silver cup on Friday for the best novelty in plants or flowers. This is certainly a great carnation and was in much better form than when shown in Chicago last year.

Joseph Labo took first on table decorations. The Chicago Carnation Company put up a splendid table of Sunrise rose, not for competition. The same firm had a magnificent display of plants and cut blooms to advertise their retail department, which opened with the flower show.

Peter Reinberg won first prize on roses, Mme. Chatenay, Sunrise and Perle. The Chicago Carnation Company first on Beauties, their only entry, Colonel Lambert second. Joseph Labo had the flower booth and did a good business. A. Lange, of Chicago, sent down a beautiful bride's bouquet. Joseph Labo and Johnson & Goranson divided honors in bouquets and designs.

The full list of awards was:

Forty named varieties, one bloom each, N. Smith & Son, first; E. G. Hill Co., second; H. W. Buckbee, third.

Twelve varieties, one bloom each, E. G. Hill Co., first.

Twelve yellow, white, pink, Gunnar Tellmann, first on each.

W. N. Rudd was first on carnations, competition open only to outside growers, with a fine vase of Phyllis.

Sweepstakes, open to all, Chicago Carnation Co. first on Fiancee; also first on fifty pinks.

Fifty white and fifty red, Thompson Carnation Co., first.

On twenty-five Beauties the Chicago Carnation Co. was first, Lambert second. Peter Reinberg was first in all other rose classes.

Mrs. Pearson was first on violets; Joseph Labo on pansies, basket roses, bride's bouquet and on funeral piece and table decorations. A. Lange was first on bridesmaid's bouquet.

Vaughan's greenhouses were first on specimen chrysanthemum plants, white, yellow, red and "any other color." H. W. Buckbee was first for pink and for bronze. Vaughan was first for berried plant and second for fern, other than Boston, with Pieroni. They were first on grafted plant.

George A. Kuhl, Pekin, Ill., was first for Boston and Pieroni.

of three. At 10:30 they were taken across the street to the Elks' clubrooms, which, by the way, are the finest in America, where a good repast was awaiting them, and to which they did full justice. About forty sat down, including Mayor Crolius. After speeches and songs the mayor pressed the button and the whole fire department of the city was there in two minutes. After a show of their skill, which was great, equal if not better than seen in larger cities, the Chicago boys were hoisted into the patrol wagon and driven to the new police station and other interesting places, and put off at their hotel at 2 a. m., well pleased that they had taken in the Joliet flower show.

Among the visitors were W. N. Rudd, P. J. Foley, F. F. Benthley, Robert Johnstone, Leonard Kill, Archie Spencer, J. S. Lubliner, Walter Kreitling, P. J. Hauswirth, George Asmus, C. A. Balluff, E. F. Winterson, J. B. Deamud, A. Lange, William Kidwell, Joseph Foerster, and many others whose names were not taken.

RED BANK, N. J.

The sixth annual exhibition of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society

On six yellows N. Butterbach, gardener for C. N. Bliss, was first, with Mrs. E. Thirkell, a grand yellow over nine inches in diameter. William Turner was second with Lord Salisbury, also a new one like the foregoing and a beautifully built bloom. Appleton was shown in several classes, and in the best shape, but could not compete with the newer varieties.

On crimson George Hale was first with H. J. Jones and Mr. Tierney, gardener for Mr. Hartshorn, second with W. R. Church.

On pink George Hale was first, with Balfour. This is certainly the best pink in commerce.

On "any other color" George Hale was first, with Brutus.

On twelve specimen blooms Geo. Hale was first, with Chas. Longley, Mrs. T. W. Pockett, Merza, Appleton, John Pockett, Carrington, G. J. Warren, White Carnot, Brutus, Peter Kay and Dazzler. William Turner was second in this class.

On the thirty-six blooms in six varieties, William Turner was first, with Mabel Morgan, H. J. Jones, Merza, Carrington, Nellie Pockett and Peter Kay. Geo. Hale was second in this class. There was a great deal of interest among the exhibitors as to which of the two gentlemen above would get first prize in this class, and the judges had a long critical examination. Mr. Turner got first by two points. Mr. Hale's White Carnot, without artificial support, could not stand up with a bloom ten inches in diameter.

There were four entries on the vase of twenty-five blooms for effect, Geo. Hale winning first and N. Butterbach second.

For chrysanthemums in pots, a group of seventy-five square feet, N. Butterbach won an easy first. A. G. Williams, gardener for Selmar Hess, was second.

In roses Geo. Hale was first for Beauties and W. W. Kennedy, gardener for A. Freidman, Red Bank, second. On Brides Mr. Tierney was first and N. Butterbach second. On Maids Mr. Tierney was first and Geo. Hale second. On "any other variety" Geo. Hale was first for Morgan.

In carnations, pink, Wm. Turner was first and W. W. Kennedy second. On white Wm. Turner was first with Queen and Tierney second with Flora Hill. On red Wm. Turner was first with Harlowarden and Mr. Tierney second with Maceo. In yellow Wm. Turner was first, also on "any other color." Enchantress was shown by Mr. Turner for exhibition only. They showed good stems and the blooms were three and a half inches in diameter.

Two big vases of Brides and Maids were shown by Frank McMahon, for exhibition only. They were the best the writer had ever seen at this time of the year. They reminded one of the great blooms from Canada, shown at the Eden Musée, at the American Rose Society's show.

For greenhouse grapes Geo. Hale was first for two fine bunches of Lady Downe's Seedling.

For foliage plants on a group of 100 square feet, H. A. Kettel, gardener for James Loeb, and James Dowlen, gardener for General Terrell, had a very close competition, and after a critical examination Mr. Dowlen was awarded first and Mr. Kettel second.

For specimen palm N. Butterbach was first and Geo. Hale second. For "any other" specimen foliage plant Geo. Hale was first and N. Butterbach second. For six specimen ferns James Dowlen was

The amateurs made good displays and there was a long list of premiums awarded to them.

A large number of florists were down from Chicago during the week and enjoyed the show and entertainment. At the close of the show on Saturday evening the Chicago bowlers, at the invitation of James Hartshorne, brought down a crack team, but only got one game out

The vegetable classes were well filled. In the collection of twelve varieties Combs & Downing, Madison, N. J., had the finest collection to be seen at this time of the year, but were disqualified on account of too many varieties, still the committee decided to give them a special prize for their exhibit. Other prize winners in vegetables were W. W. Kennedy, H. A. Kettel, J. Dowlen, Geo. Kuhn, Wm. Turner and Hugh McCarron. Mr. W. W. Kennedy and Mrs. Frank Hodges, of Red Bank, had some fine fancy pigeons on exhibition, which were a great attraction. H. A. Kettel received special mention for a pan of well-grown lily of the valley. PITTSBURG.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club was held on November 3, and, although it was election night, we had a very large meeting and a magnificent display of chrysanthemums. Four new names were proposed for membership. Christmas plants and flowers and materials used in Christmas work is to be our subject for the next meeting, December 1.

One hundred and sixty-three distinct varieties of named chrysanthemums were shown at our meeting and of these seventy-five varieties came from the Phipps conservatories, Schenley park. They were simply grand, with massive blossoms, fat and perfect foliage and strong, stiff stems. When we consider that every one of these flowers was grown in pots and not one planted out on benches we appreciate more and more the masterly hand of John Jones, the conservatory foreman, as a cultivator. Some of his round-headed blooms were eleven and three-fourths inches in diameter and his extended Rider Haggard flowers were half an inch larger than that. D. Fraser, of H. C. Frick's private greenhouses, sent a number of last year's new varieties, but they showed no marked advance over older sorts. Blind Brothers had fine flowers. They grow them on benches in three inches of soil, and plant them right out there in June, from the cutting bed. Goodwin Brothers, Bridgeville, Pa., had a lot of an extra vigorous form of Ivory which looked very good and the cut flower men pronounced it a great advance on the plain Ivory. The Cut Flower Co. brought examples of every variety consigned to their store. And from the railroad greenhouses at Sewickly and Mr. Wilde, at Beaver Falls, we had fine exhibits.

Our distant friends treated us most generously. F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., sent a splendid lot of the finest kind of chrysanthemums, with beautiful flower heads, stems as stiff as pokers and luxuriant foliage up to the necks of the blossoms, and they sent a letter describing these and their manner of growing them which was read in meeting. Mr. Clark, the 'mum man of the Cut Flower Co., spoke up very ardently in favor of these Pierson 'mums.

Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., sent numerous varieties of flowers. One named Vera is a pure white pompon, very full double and of most refined and substantial appearance. Almost every man in the room wrote down its name. Nita, pink; Zenobia, yellow; Julia, red, and Alena, pink, were also good. Among the large-bloomed sorts were F. S. Vallis, pale yellow; Millicent Richardson, blood crimson, pale reverse; M. Paul Labbe, Mme. Waldeck Rosseau, Surprise, a splendid yellow seedling of theirs called Golden Age, and others.

Dr. B. F. Galloway, of the Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C., sent very interesting flowers. Among the standard sorts Col. W. J. Bryan was superb. Why don't the people grow more of this variety? It is silvery white, faintly flushed with pink inside. John Jones is a Republican but he thinks the world of Col. W. J. Bryan and grows it in quantity. Dr. Galloway also sent a large, full double, silvery white, broad flower raised by Mr. Byrnes, the head gardener at the Department. It has been named Mrs. J. M. Wilson, in compliment to the wife of the Secretary of Agriculture.

R. Vincent, Jr. & Son, of White Marsh, sent a great variety of pompon sorts from their outdoor fields, also a lot of blooms of seedlings raised by them. They very kindly sent us some notes regarding the cultivation of these flowers: "Plant out good stock from two-inch pots in early spring, in rows wide enough apart to be worked by horse-power and fourteen inches apart in the row. Lift these in fall, before they come into bloom, and place them as close together as they can stand on a bench in the greenhouse for early flowers. For late blooms plant them in a cold frame, or anywhere where they can be protected from severe freezing."

When we opened the boxes from the E. G. Hill Company, Richmond, Ind., we stared in wonder at the beauty of the contents. They contained fourteen varieties, namely, Lord Hopetoun, S. T. Wright, Mme. Von Andre, Leila Filkins, Mme. J. H. Perraud, Mrs. Tranter, C. J. Salter, Mrs. Popham, Ben Wells, Ethel Fitzroy, Silver Queen, Australia, Mrs. T. W. Pockett and F. A. Cobbold. By actual measurement Mrs. T. W. Pockett was twelve and one-fourth inches in diameter. Mr. Hill writes: "Never before has one single season brought out such a large number of magnificent varieties. Of those sent you will easily see many of them show marked merits. Ethel Fitzroy is slightly weak in the neck, otherwise the grandest bronze we have seen. Mme. J. H. Perraud we consider very fine. Mme. Von Andre is a yellow sport of Mutual Friend. The blooms we have sent of Lord Hopetoun and S. T. Wright are only medium sized, but they show you the variety's characteristics. Australia produces flowers almost twice as large as the one sent you." PA.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Tulips and Hyacinths.

Most of our patrons, as soon as the geraniums and cannas are gone, are anxious to get their tulips planted, and may think they are neglected if there is any delay. But really it is a mistake to plant too early. The best tulips I ever saw bloom in the spring were not planted until the end of November, and, if the weather remained open, a few weeks later would be just as well. The reason for late planting of these hardy bulbs is, I think, that when they have too long a time for root growth in the fall they flower very early in the spring, have few more roots to make and are soon exhausted, while the late planted bulbs make roots in the spring and the flowers are not only finer but continue longer.

Begonia Rex.

This once valued foliage plant seems to have gone out of favor both as an indoor decorative plant and as a plant for veranda boxes and vases in shady positions. If they still enter into your business they should be propagated just as soon as the sand in your propagating bed is warm from fire heat. If you don't propagate early you won't have plants of any size in the spring. Choose strong, well-matured leaves, but not by any means those that are about to decay. Slice them up into small pieces, say two inches long, having at the base of each piece a mid-rib, and insert in the sand half their length. In four or five weeks they will send up a small leaf and will have a bunch of roots, when they should be potted and will grow freely if the soil is light and the temperature not below 60 degrees at night.

Begonia Vernon is now established as a good bedding plant. Seed of it can be sown now or soon. The seed is very minute, so avoid sowing thickly, or the little plants will smother before you can get them transplanted. This class of begonias is most useful for many purposes.

Lily of the Valley.

Very shortly the import orders of pips of this very important florists' flower will be arriving. The man who grows 50,000 and more knows how to handle the pips, but there are many who force weekly only perhaps 500 and have not the conveniences or experience. Unpack as soon as they arrive and stand the bunches in a box an inch or two deeper than the top of the pips. If the roots are dry, dip them in water for a moment. Between each row of bunches pack some soil and cover the pips with an inch of soil. Where to store these boxes is of importance. Whether it is necessary that the pips be frozen before being brought in to force is a question I will not venture to decide, but I hardly believe it is an essential. Too much moisture in the condition they are in, with their roots packed in bunches, is known to be injurious to them; therefore the boxes should be placed in a frame and covered with sash or shutters to keep out the rains. When very hard freezing begins four or five inches of leaves or stable litter can be thrown over them. Whatever quantity you force weekly, it is most advisable that you should have that quantity in one box, so that you know just what you are bringing in. If they should be frozen, which certainly does not hurt them, it is easy to get out a box, or may be two or three, but it is not so easy to pick out so many bunches from a box or bed. It has been advised, and doubtless is a good plan with large growers, to sort the roots on arrival, sorting out the strongest pips for early forcing and the weaker for later months, but the quality of roots we have been getting for some years we believe this would be a waste of labor, as by the tenth of January we have cut ninety per cent of good spikes. Don't attempt to force the fall imported roots before December 20; that is, don't put them in the sand until that date. Although we have had them in flower by New Year's it is better to depend on cold storage stock until early January.

It is amusing to recall the many early theories about the forcing of this delicate flower. Sphagnum moss, crushed coke and other mediums had their advocates, with more or less success, but the correct conditions were not understood. I think it is understood that any old sand is good enough, provided the conditions are right, which are, briefly, warm sand and cool air overhead, but I hope to have more to say later on.

Forcing Iris.

A week or two ago I had something to say about Spanish iris and unfortunately I was made to say that "as they do not flower out of doors till the middle of June they would force the same as early tulips." It is evident that I meant to say they would not force. Possibly I did say so, but the printer made the omission. However, don't waste any bulbs, even if they are very cheap, in trying to get them before Easter, and if Easter is early even that may be a failure. Planted now or any time before a freeze up, they bloom out of doors with us about the middle of June and are a beautiful orchid-like flower.

DRAPERY STUDIES.

III—Fabrics and Flowers.

A floral design—we are speaking now of the word in its broadest sense—is a picture, and like other pictures needs its unity of parts and its mountings. Whatever materials are used as accessories must either become a part of the picture or a useless encumbrance. In tying a bunch of flowers with ribbon make the ribbon as much a part of the picture as is one of the flowers itself, or discard it. There are two ways by which this entire harmony may be secured—the union of coloring and the union of form.

One of the most unnecessary perplexities is trying to match flowers and ribbon. When I try to do that, I don't. The difference in texture between a fabric and a flower is accountable for the difficulty. The same color in each will appear duller in one than in the other; therefore, so far as the eye is concerned, the colors do not match. Get a harmonious color, either deeper or lighter. Within the color combination of flower and foliage find a tint or shade that will be a key to the harmony. Often a blotch or a streak or a line in either, or the hue of a stamen or pistil will be the best suggestion for coloring. It is especially difficult to find fabrics that will even harmonize with the more brilliant colors, like those found in the Joost or Lawson carnation, for instance. Their intensity and depth are unap-proached in fabric coloring. So we turn to the foliage for help, and find it an easy task to get a light gray-green resembling the leaves. This green, by the way, will harmonize with any color of carnation. With violets the tints are much the best.

This principle of merely harmonizing, rather than trying to match colors, is helpful when the flowers are more or less off color. A rich tint of American Beauty ribbon suitable for that rose in its prime, will kill the colors which succeed each other in the fading process, and although it may be profitable financially for a florist to keep a stock of ribbon, he can never keep a large enough stock to make selections for each case.

Next to coloring, sizes and styles of ribbon ties have much to do with the appearance of bunches of flowers. As a rule small, delicate flowers should be tied with narrow ribbon, from No. 3 to No. 9. The narrower the ribbon the more is needed in cluster bows. With the use of wider ribbon decrease the number of loops.

Not only union in coloring, but a connection between the tie and the bunch adds to the taking qualities. Instead of always placing bows and ties over the stem ends of a bunch of flowers, let one long end run up through the bunch, draw a bud or two through a loop of ribbon or tie the bow on one side instead of on top. Tie with twisted bows, irregular bows, and once in a while no bows at all, just knotted ends.

Using ribbon as mounting makes a casket sash. This design calls for about a yard of sash ribbon with a cluster of flowers on each end. Lay the sash along the top of the casket or across, with the clusters hanging. This design is illustrated herewith. An ordinary cluster of small flowers may be mounted on a sash ribbon, as shown. Fringe both ends of the ribbon and let the foliage reach the fringe.

Another use of ribbon or silk fabric is that of both tie and background, as seen in the illustration of the wreath. Using a plain, unfilled wire wreath-frame, secure one end of the silk to the frame anywhere by a hard knot, and begin to wrap the frame. After a round or two of the wrapping begin to insert the stems of the flowers. As the wrapping progresses, catch in more flowers, singly or in groups, with extra foliage, as in ordinary arrangements. When finished the piece shows the flowers growing from the drapery folds. With the remaining end of the silk make a fluffy bow. Wide soft ribbon, such as Liberty satin, or silk by the yard, is preferable for this arrangement. Where silk is used, it will require from two to three yards, according to the size of the wreath. Cut the silk in two lengthwise and gain the advantage of more wrapping.

Seasonable Notes.

In growing violets, as in growing all other kinds of plants, so much depends on the houses, on their location and exposure, on the soil, moisture, air, watering, ventilation and other details, both great and small, but too numerous to mention, that no grower, no matter how expert, can lay down any hard and fast cultural rules. After making a thorough study of this subject and following general principles the grower who is observing will find that he will be constantly learning new things, little items of one kind or another, all of which, closely observed, tend to produce the well-grown house of violets. The experience that he gets in this way leads the grower intuitively to know the needs of a house when he enters same and knows how it has been treated. And yet this may all be hard to express in words or on paper, as instruction for others to follow.

Value of Records.

In addition to the above mentioned things, while it means labor, the more complete, written records (don't trust to memory), regarding soil, fertilizers, size of clumps or crowns, time of planting, weather, comparison of houses treated differently, etc., etc., the grower makes, the more he learns that is not guess work, and the better prepared he is for the next season's labor. And I would add that he will be astonished often, in more than one way, on consulting these same records.

One thing we are thoroughly convinced of is that the atmosphere has much to do with successful violet growing, despite all our care. Now, if you keep a daily record of blooms cut, also of each kind, and if possible of each house separately, you will probably find, on looking it over at the end of the season, that it would pay you better to grow more of one kind and less of another. You will find that the one kind gives you more flowers than the other; that it likes your soil and general treatment better; that you succeeded in having a larger crop on at holidays, when you especially wanted them. All these things are little items and often seem like too much bother, and yet it is just these things, properly done, that may keep you from caring for a house from year to year that is yielding little or no profit, but which with corrections could be made to pay handsomely.

Soft Growth.

Of course there are always some conditions that cannot be entirely overcome, only modified as far as possible. Take our weather lately, for instance; while it was delightful and good in many ways, yet do your best and you could not keep your violet houses as cool as you would like, with the result that it brought on the blooms fast when you did not wish many, and also caused the plants to push out a new, soft growth, at the expense of later buds, growth that will not be properly hardened up when it is suddenly overtaken by cold, wet, stormy fall and winter weather, checking it quickly and making it extremely susceptible to disease, if so be there is any lurking around. Naturally spot, etc., is much less liable to be about and able to spread if, as I have before mentioned, the houses are kept scrupulously clean and well dusted with air-slaked lime.

Sow Bugs.

It is likely that you have been attending to the poison for the sow bugs. However, because you have lowered their census, do not flatter yourself that you have exterminated them, for if you look carefully you will probably find a few left, enough in a comparatively short time to make a good showing again. So it is desirable to hunt up here and there the spots where there are some sow bugs and spread another banquet for their benefit. It also costs less to feast a few than it does to have to set a large table.

Inspect the Piping.

It might not be amiss to suggest, if you have not already attended to it, that it is well, while this nice weather lasts, to look over your heating arrangements which you will have to use later and avoid finding out when you have to fire up that the boiler and pipes need some repairs which may then prove much more expensive to make. It is well, if the water has become lowered in the system, to first fill it full, then go regularly over every joint in the pipes and boiler and see that they are perfectly tight and secure in every respect, that there are no sags or breaks in the supports that have thus thrown a strain on joints which, if they have not yet yielded, may be nearly ready to do so. Take particular care, if the pipes go through walls or floors, for here you will frequently find, even in the best of buildings, a little settling that may be throwing a great deal of strain on the pipes and may cause them to give way at a most inconvenient season. Look to the joints entering boilers, as this is one of the worst places in the system, especially if you use wrought pipe. If you do don't be afraid to use hammer and cold chisel freely here, to see if the threads are not nearly rusted through. Even if you find everything secure it is always well to drain off all the water, washing out the pipes and boiler thoroughly, filling again with fresh water. You will be astonished, if you have never had your attention called to it, how much better fresh, clean water heats up than old, stale, muddy water.

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES—WEST.

Seasonable Treatment.

We have had several nights the past week with the mercury down to 20 degrees and for some time we have needed fire every night to keep up the proper temperature in the houses. After the plants come into bloom in good shape it pays well to keep up a regular temperature. While the plants are making their fall growth and before the buds have attained any size an occasional drop to 40 degrees does very little if any harm. But after the crop is on and you really need the blooms (and quality of course counts) you want no split calyxes, and there is also less danger of disease in a dry atmosphere than if the houses get damp and stagnant every night.

The days are getting shorter and the sun weaker and there is much more moisture in the air than there is earlier, when the sun is stronger and the days longer. Let the fireman get up steam every night and if it is necessary (to keep the temperature down) let him raise the ventilators an inch or two. There may be some nights when it will be quite warm and on such occasions he should at least run the steam around every hour or two, just to keep the air dry. But on every possible occasion have the ventilators up a little.

Perhaps I am somewhat of a crank on the fresh air question, but I have found by experience that you never injure your carnations with too much air as long as the temperature is at the proper point, while you certainly can make your carnations soft and spindling by keeping a close, damp atmosphere. Especially at this time of the year you should do all you possibly can to induce a sturdy hardy growth.

You must be more careful in your watering, too, now. Watch for dry spots wherever the heating pipes come close to the bench. If the pipes are below, the soil may dry out at the bottom first and you must dig down to the bottom occasionally. The south side of the bed is also apt to dry out quicker on bright days and more frequent watering will be needed. In fact, you should exercise the utmost care in your watering, as a few days of carelessness are liable to cause you much loss and vexation.

We do not syringe so much from now on, as we are liable to have a rainy spell any time. If your plants are free from red spider, which they ought to be, you will be able to keep them so by syringing about once each week. If the days are very warm, and the plants seem to suffer, a very light spraying about eleven o'clock will help them materially. Don't wet down the walks any more, as they may not dry out again by nightfall. When you water, do it as early in the day as possible, as you are sure to wet the walks some while watering, and the surface of the beds will also dry off some, besides giving the plants the benefit of the water when the sun is the warmest.

Mr. Osborn gave us a good article on packing carnation blooms, and I want to say "ditto." Let me also add that if you can pack all your carnations without bunching them it will pay you.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

Keeping Qualities.

The keeping quality of a carnation bloom has much to do in determining its value and, as stated last week, it depends on the grower's method of handling. It is important that they be taken from the plant with a sharp knife, making a clean cut. No mangling or crushing of the stem tissue should occur, as this seriously affects the stem's capacity to conduct water. Early morning is the ideal time, although during cold weather or on cloudy days, cutting late in the afternoon cannot be said to be inadvisable. The main thing to avoid is cutting when the sun is exerting its direct influence on the plants.

Vases previously filled with fresh water and distributed about the house for immediate reception of the bloom, will save time and reduce the chances of the cut ends becoming seared over through drying of exuding sap. The importance of getting blooms into water as soon as possible after cutting cannot be overestimated and to this end I would select grades when cutting rather than cut everything as it comes and grade afterwards. This plan saves extra handling and reduces the liability of broken stems and muddled flowers.

When fifty blooms have been cut, place at once in water and one cause of sleepy blooms will have been obviated. Vases should be of such depth as will allow at least two-thirds of the stem to stand in water and the vases ought to be thoroughly washed inside every week, using a few drops of ammonia in the water.

It is better to err a little on the side of cutting somewhat underdeveloped than to allow blooms to stand until that stage is reached where the pollen is ripe and necessary handling will induce self-pollenization. A flower cut when three-quarters blown and placed in water for twelve hours will be in prime condition to ship and reach the retailer in shape to be a source of profit to him, a delight to the customer and a pleasant reflection on the grower.

Never cut blooms from plants suffering from dryness at the root, or that from any cause appear wilted. In the vases use water having a temperature of about 60 degrees and as soon as filled with bloom place in a room where the thermometer is not over 55 degrees, but which will fall not lower than 45 degrees. By a room is not meant a close, stuffy cupboard or an artificially cooled receptacle, but a room in which the air is constantly changed without exposing the flowers to any strong draughts and where direct sunlight is shut out, but not so completely as to produce pitch darkness, as the flowers favor a certain amount of light in expanding after being cut and this leads me to caution against crowding too many blooms in a vase.

Chemical Manures.

Blooms grown under right conditions will keep longer than if produced in too high temperature or on plants overfed or watered, for as wrong conditions weaken the plant it must follow that the product, be it cuttings or bloom, will be inferior. The use of prepared chemical manures is risky business in the hand of the average grower, not because he is ignorant of his plants' needs or does not know the effect of certain chemicals, but, being in the dark as to their ingredients, he is unable to determine the quantity suited to his particular soil, not only at the first application, but at the second and succeeding ones, when perhaps a larger or smaller quantity is needed to maintain the proper proportions of nitrogen, potassium and phosphorus. On the whole I would class chemical manures as stimulants useful perhaps near the end of the season, when propagation is long past and circumstances demand quantities of low grade flowers. GEO. S. OSBORN.

ROSES.

As the holidays draw near there is always more or less nervous anxiety on the part of the grower, dreading that he will not be on time with a good cut for that occasion, and this nervousness is not confined to the young and inexperienced, many of the older hands being annual victims. If the weather remains clear and bright for a few days they regain their confidence, but just as soon as dark weather returns they resume their azure disposition, making themselves and every one else as miserable as possible.

In this frame of mind a grower is more liable to commit an error of judgment than he otherwise would be. If crops are seemingly tardy, good judgment will have to be exercised before any increase of temperature is resorted to. Remember that if wood and foliage get into a soft condition at this season there is little hope for recuperation before spring, and any check to root action means weak, debilitated wood for next crop, and as our customers require blooms after the holidays are over, when they are even more critical as to quality, the necessity for caution is apparent.

The grower who makes the health of his stock his first study is very conservative when it is a question of hastening a crop. He is from long experience alive to the fact that stock at that season can by a night or two at an increased temperature be so reduced in vitality that the future crop may be endangered.

Arthur Herrington, President Chrysanthemum Society of America.
(Re-elected for a fourth term at New York, November 11, 1903.)

Crops which require a little pushing should have a gentle stimulant in the form of liquid manure, with a little nitrate of potash added, and this must be, to begin with, about half the usual strength. If the weather is bright an increase of 5 or 6 degrees during the day is more preferable to raising the night temperature.

Since my connection with THE REVIEW I have noted that about three weeks after holiday time letters began to pour in about trouble with stock. They are mostly in the same vein, stock having been good or fair up till that season, when suddenly everything seemed to go wrong; leaves became thin and lose color, eventually dropping off; the young growths are sickly and unfit to bear a crop, and the grower has his hands full of trouble the rest of the season.

If a rise of temperature at night is determined on this should not be obtained by closing the ventilators tight, but by turning on more pipes, as this is the most frequent cause of these conditions just described.

A carefully apportioned supply of manure water will now have a beneficial effect, but great care must be exercised not to use it when the soil in the bench is dry, nor to apply it when the bench is too wet, as any approach to saturation will cause a decided check to root action.

Select bright, sunny days for this operation and the plants will show by their increased vigor crispness of foliage and wiriness of stem how much they appreciate your intelligent care. RIBES.

THE C. S. A. MEETING.

There was a large and enthusiastic business meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society of America on Wednesday afternoon. Arthur Herrington was re-elected to the presidency for the third time. Elmer D. Smith was elected vice-president, and Secretary F. H. Lemon and Treasurer J. N. May were re-elected. Professor George E. Stone lectured on "The Diseases of the Chrysanthemum." In the evening a banquet was tendered to Mr. Herrington.

PRESIDENT HERRINGTON'S ADDRESS.

The following is the address of President A. Herrington, read at the C. S. A. meeting in New York Wednesday afternoon, November 11:

A year ago, in Chicago, in first convention assembled, we reviewed the past so far as it pertained to the work of the Chrysanthemum Society of America from its inception, took a careful survey of our position as a national society and imbued with enthusiasm by the support accorded that meeting, resolved that its annual fixity was from henceforth an assured fact.

A desire long cherished in the minds of many had at last been consummated, and the consummation was justified by the results attained, as shown then in the general interest manifested in the society's work, and since by a large addition to its roll of membership.

In all undertakings diligence in the advocacy of aim and object is usually a stepping stone to recognition, and a well-directed effort to give a larger national significance to the work of the Chrysanthemum Society has already met with such marked encouragement and responsive support as to justify the belief that there is a bright and useful future assured the society.

The general interest in the chrysanthemum is well sustained, and there is no apparent reason for any abatement thereof in a flower of such inherent variability. If "variety is the spice of life," how richly endowed with this particular trait is the life and history and the unknown future development of the flower for which we stand as sponsors, endeavoring to obtain for it a larger measure of popularity, exceeding even that which it receives today.

Coincident with this, in fact a necessity toward its attainments, is the organized effort for which the society exists, and dealing with a subject so comprehensive, so rich in latent charm, it behooves us to rise equal to the exigencies of our day, to pursue our aims diligently and thoroughly, to keep a careful record of what American growers have done in the past, to see that the trend of the present efforts are upwardly progressive, and to foster future development along all possible lines, so that more and more the chrysanthemum may become a people's flower, a flower for the amateur as well as for the professional florist and the wealthy owner of a finely-equipped estate employing a skilled gardener.

Giving honor to whom honor is due, we must admit, professional men, florists and gardeners have been the pioneer workers in the chrysanthemum field, and that they, too, were the organizers, and are today the main support of the society, as they saw concerted effort materially enhanced progress. It should be the ambition of us all to work for a broader development, and our society can only be truly national in its work by taking cognizance of all types of the flower, of all conditions of culture, thus centering in itself, and work, the interest, and commanding the support of chrysanthemum lovers, professional and amateur, of the greenhouse and the open air.

The thoughts herein expressed are perhaps a repetition of those uttered a year ago, and are intentionally repeated in the hope that other minds will deliberate upon them, as it must in truth be admitted we cannot ignore any part or aspect of the work to which we are committed. Where we lead others will follow, and a generous co-operation is assured to us. We have ample evidence of this, as demonstrated by the united effort that has culminated in the grand exhibition amassed to celebrate this occasion. When the invitation of the American Institute of New York was accepted your president, on behalf of the Chrysanthemum Society, visited a number of the local societies and invited them to co-operate. How generous was the response! Is it not cause for congratulation that the substantial provision made by the American Institute has been supplemented by contributory exhibits from ten other separate horticultural societies all uniting in the common desire to make this exhibition worthy of the occasion, to honor the national society?

Encouraging Exhibitions.

In so far as the organizing of chrysanthemum exhibitions is concerned there is little for us to do; they are amply provided for, but would it not be wise to devise some means to further encourage them with suitable awards, such as a medal or some suitable token that would carry with it the prestige of being a national award? This idea, too, was suggested a year ago. The time for action is here, and now that we are in convention assembled.

Advancing Society Interests.

It would be well, also, that we should give some thought to ways and means toward improving our organization. We should now be in a position to think and act intelligently along these lines, as the constitution and by-laws of the society, heretofore only available in the original typewritten copy, were ordered to be printed in the proceedings of our Chicago meeting, and they will be found on pages 27-8-9 of that publication, a copy of which has been sent to all members.

A careful perusal of the constitution reveals the fact that we have a reserve of available executive force that has never yet been brought into action. Article IV entitles us to have district vice-presidents for seven specified districts. Let us call out the reserves, and given men in sympathy with the cause, what a fertile field of missionary work these districts should prove! As a means toward securing a large aggregation of membership probably none better could be devised.

Some amendments are needed also to adapt our laws to present conditions of the society's work. One instance only need be cited, that of the committees that for a long time have been doing such admirable work annually in passing judgment upon the novelties submitted to them. These irregularities could probably be best rectified by the appointment of a committee to revise the constitution and by-laws and submit its recommendations in accordance with Article IX.

The record of the proceedings of the society, as published, has already been alluded to. It is a valuable compendium of information, containing that remarkably comprehensive series of papers submitted at the Chicago meeting, and which, if justly appraised, more than compensates for the cost of membership. It was, by motion, ordered to also incorporate in this publication a record of all new chrysanthemums introduced in America since 1880, Elmer D. Smith having tendered the society the use of his records. No adequate provision, however, was made for the copying of the valuable records that are in Mr. Smith's possession, and which obviously will involve quite some time and labor to classify, compile and make ready for printing. Action should be taken at this meeting and authority granted providing ways and means for the preparation of this important matter for publication in our next volume. Not alone do we need to have this information available for ready reference; our continental co-workers are also anxious we should publish it.

A Chrysanthemum Year Book.

A subject worthy of thought is how we may enhance the interest and the resultant practical value of our annual publication so as to make it sought after, to make it a means of bringing into and keeping within the fold of membership those members—and there might be hundreds of them—that are prevented or are unable to attend the annual meetings. Could we not enlarge the scope of our publication; make it a Chrysanthemum Year Book, and therein review the season of the flower, enumerate the new ones as they appear, and describe them in a few terse but readable articles that would tell more, and with better effect, than the conventional catalogue descriptions? Even work of this character is directly in line with our object, and can be better done by our society than by the average individual. We extol the fact that the literature of the chrysanthemum surpasses that of any other flower. Do we not, then, owe it to those who shall come after that the record of our time shall be handed down complete and unimpaired?

Creation of Special Committees.

It is easy to be critical, to say here and there are vulnerable points of attack. The defensive part is the harder part, and calls for the exercise of a careful discrimination in laying out an aggressive policy. We assemble but once a year, and time is too limited for great accomplishments involving a mass of detail. A way suggests itself, however, in which, if we could agree upon the desirability of diligently prosecuting certain lines of work, to create special committees to carry on the work deputed to them between our annual sessions. This would conduce to rapidity of progress and show in our annual reports a larger measure of attained results.

Retrospective.

In this city in August, 1900, I for the first time attended a meeting of the faithful few who for a decade had held the society true to active purpose, confident in the belief there was a need for it to be, though general apathy discouraged their efforts. The election of officers brought to me the responsibility of directing its affairs. From that moment one hope was dominant—the hope that ways and means might be found to establish a closer community of interest between the work and the workers; the hope that the society might meet in association with some important exhibition and thus better fulfill its mission.

The Horticultural Society of Chicago provided the first opportunity, and its noble effort has been ably seconded by the American Institute of New York, with ten other societies co-operating. In Chicago, contrary to his personal wishes, you saw fit to continue your president in office, one member quoting the old adage as to its being unwise to "swap horses in crossing a stream." To-day we have more than crossed the stream; we are assuredly on high, dry ground, for how otherwise could such a fire of enthusiasm be kindled as enlivened the scene of action to-day?

For your warm encouragement, hearty assistance and patient toleration thanks is tendered, coupled with the wish that you will all unite in upholding others with the same cordial support you have given those in whom past authority and responsibility have been vested, and so individually and collectively ensure for the Chrysanthemum Society of America a lasting and progressive future.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The markets for cut flowers and for stocks go hand in hand; more and more is demonstrated the melancholy fact that Wall street dominates the flower business in New York and prosperity in the financial center means success for the florists' trade. A killing frost and the return of the "150" may lift a little of the incubus from the back of the market, but a recurrence of old time progress seems an impossibility until the bears are skinned in the financial district and public confidence is restored. The men who spend money for luxuries are not earning their salt.

Club Meeting.

The best meeting of the New York Florists' Club in a decade was held on Monday evening. An attendance of over fifty of the leading members attested the interest in the flower show, the readings of Alex. Wallace and the fine exhibits of flowers and plants and the visits of Presidents Breitmeyer and Rackham and other notables. It was a meeting long to be remembered and the utmost cordiality and enthusiasm prevailed.

Mr. Traendly's report showed a balance of $16 profit from the outing last summer, which the club donated, with a collection of some $40 or more to H. Schweitzer, of Mendota, Ill. Messrs. Dugan, Palmer, Muller, Scene and Miller were elected members of the club, and Lyman B. Crow, of Lord & Burnham, was proposed for membership. Mr. Sheridan read the report of the nominating committee, and the following names were suggested for the various offices in 1904: For president, J. H. Troy, John Burnie and W. H. Siebrecht; for vice-president, F. H. Traendly, W. B. Durie, William Duckham; for secretary, John Young, L. W. Wheeler, Jos. Manda, Jr.; for treasurer, C. B. Weathered, Lawrence Haffner, S. C. Nash; for trustees, John Morris, Alex. Wallace, A. L. Miller, J. B. Nugent, Theo. Lang, William Elliott.

Messrs. Breitmeyer, Rackham, Crowe and Smith occupied seats on the rostrum with the president during the address and readings of Mr. Wallace, for which he received a vote of thanks. The new roses exhibited by Messrs. Breitmeyer and May and the new fern Scotti, by John Scott, were much admired and the committee on awards rendered most complimentary reports and gave Mr. Scott a certificate of merit. The rules of the club make this impossible with the rose until a committee appointed by the club shall see the roses growing. Mr. Scott's fern, a sport from the Boston, is remarkably graceful and compact, and will undoubtedly prove a valuable commercial acquisition.

President Breitmeyer gave an interesting address, expressing his pleasure at being present and meeting so many of his friends, and attesting to their loyalty at Milwaukee. He complimented the club on its fine attendance, its beautiful hall and the good feeling so evident, making in conclusion a short plea for co-operation in furthering the interests of the S. A. F.

President Rackham enjoyed his first visit to any florists' club outside of his home town, Detroit, and dwelt eloquently upon the coming carnation convention in March and tendered a hearty invitation to all to come and enjoy it. He promised the largest and most comprehensive premium list ever offered.

Elmer Smith and Peter Crowe gave interesting addresses and the meeting closed with mutual congratulations and evident faith in the triumph of the great 'mum exhibition to which the balance of the week will be devoted. Everything at this writing indicates a success far beyond the general expectations.

The advance guard of invaders arrived on Monday in New York, President Breitmeyer and President Rackham, of Detroit; Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, and Peter Crowe, of Utica.

The Kurzman-Dacre Co. had a fine decoration on Monday evening at Delmonico's, the annual alumni dinner of the British university graduates living in New York.

Some of the retailers are still busy with weddings, banquets and out of town festivities. Thomas Young, Jr., had a big wedding last week at Goshen. McConnell cared for the interests of the Olney-Mitchell union in Harlem, and Hodgson on Tuesday catered to royalty at the nuptials of Miss Goelet and the Duke.

The ribbon house of Schloss Bros. has had a fine trade since the convention and report an increasing demand for their novelties. The orders for Thanksgiving come from all sections of the country.

Sigmund Geller opened his factory at 133 W. Twenty-eighth street last week for the manufacture of florists' supplies. Mr. Geller reports a fine demand this fall.

The pioneer house of J. K. Allen maintains its reputation for extensive out-of-town shipments and early attention to its customers. Six in the morning finds "J. K." on deck, ready for business, 365 days in the year.

A. H. Langjahr extends the courtesies of his office conveniences to all horticultural visitors to the metropolis.

John N. May and wife, of St. Paul, are visiting New York. Mr. May has been in the employ of his uncle, L. L. May, for many years.

The shipments of violets and American Beauties to Walter Sheridan continue in a flood, but the quality of the stock maintains its reputation.

Charles Millang has taken a long lease of the whole building at 50 West Twenty-ninth street, and contemplates extensive improvements. He will put in a new steam boiler, extend his greenhouse to the limit of his room and use the present glass as an adjunct to his cut flower department.

James McManus has developed a fine orchid demand during the past year, shipping daily to the large cities and receiving consignments from many of the large private estates, as well as the regular growers.

Ralph M. Ward & Co. is the name of a new exporting and importing house at 17 Battery place. Mr. Ward has lately been a partner with Hagemann & Co. He has with him C. Wayne Ward and J. H. Thomas. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market here the past week was still in a very much overcrowded condition. The weather has been ideal but the demand for cut flowers is very unsteady at the retail stores. The wholesale florists are not in the best of humor, as the abundance of chrysanthemum blooms has forced prices on everything else down to the lowest limit. Chrysanthemums themselves are cheaper than ever before and good large blooms can be bought at $2 per dozen and $15 in hundred lots. Appleton, Mrs. Perrin, Robinson and Ivory are among the best sellers just now. Some extra fine Timothy Eaton are promised for this week and a fine lot of Jerome Jones and Major Bonnaffon are in today, which are really fine and bringing top price, $2.50 per dozen.

In roses the same conditions prevail, except in the case of a little extra fancy stock, which is selling at what it is really worth. Brides, Bridesmaids and Meteors of good quality are selling at 75 cents per 100 and cheaper in 1,000 lots. American Beauties are not quite so bad and the price is kept up on first quality stock. These are not what you would call over-plentiful, still enough for the demand.

Carnations are also suffering for want of demand and some good stock is going to waste. The street fakir is making his own price on these and the store men are buying only the best at $1 and $1.50 per 100. Gov. Wolcott is the best white and E. Crocker the best pink, with a few good Crane for red.

Violets the past week had to suffer from the warm weather and the demand was light, with the supply fairly plentiful at 35 cents and 50 cents per 100. Lily of the valley is still selling well, with the supply somewhat limited; $4 and $5 is the price now. A few callas and Paper Whites are in but not enough to quote prices. All green had a good demand, especially smilax.

Various Notes.

George W. Goldner, representing Reed & Keller, of New York, was with us the past week. Mr. Goldner reports that he is meeting with good success in florists' supplies of all kinds.

Miss Belle Miller, of Springfield, Ill., was a visitor the past week, calling on the trade and friends about town.

The Koenig Floral Co. place at North St. Louis is making a fine show of pot chrysanthemums. Among them are some of the best varieties, such as Appleton, Robinson and Mrs Perrin, which are looking fine and selling well.

At Meinhardts', a little north of Koenig's, they are also making a good show of potted chrysanthemums and choice cut flowers of all kinds. Fred reports trade as very good in all lines.

C. Young & Sons Co. is making a fine exhibition of chrysanthemums at the store on Olive street. John Young reports business brisk in the bulb line.

Grimm & Gorley are sporting a fine new delivery wagon. They furnished the decorations for the opening of a large department store in their neighborhood in which a big lot of wild smilax was used and a fine lot of plants.

Early Saturday morning the orchid house at Shaw's Garden was partly destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $1,000 and a great many of the fine plants suffered very much from smoke and heat. Superintendent H. C. Irish and a large force of men worked hard to save the other houses, which they finally did.

Ostertag Bros. made a very fine decoration at Faust's for horse show week. Henry reports that they used a big lot of stock of all kinds and it made one of the prettiest decorations seen for a long time at a place of this kind.

Some very pretty horse show decorations were made in the show windows of the local florists. Among the best were those of the Ellison Floral Co., at Grand and Olive streets, Miss Newman and Miss T. Badaracco. All business houses down town were decorated with horse show colors, green and white, in which a good many white pot chrysanthemums were used.

Philip Breitmeyer, of Detroit, in a letter has promised the local club an exhibition of the new rose for its meeting next week. Baur & Smith, of Indianapolis, will send a bunch of their new carnation, Indianapolis. James Hartshorne will try to send a few of Fiancee and all of them will be looked for with interest by the members of the club.

F. W. Maas, of the St. Louis Seed Co., was made happy the past week by the arrival of a twelve-pounder at his home. Mother and child are doing nicely.

The St. Louis bowlers congratulate the Chicago Florists' Bowling Club on its selection of George Asmus as its president. A better selection could not have been made.

Bowling.

The bowlers rolled three games on Monday night, and a few good scores were made, which were as follows:

Player.	1st.	2d.	3d.	T'l.
C. A. Kuehn.....	170	211	129	500
J. J. Beneke	172	156	171	499

Friday night this week the florists' team will bowl the Belleville Club at the Blue Ribbon alleys. The team selected to bowl is made up of Kuehn, Beyer, Miller, Guy and Beneke.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mrs. William Billingsley died of fever November 8 at her home. The remains were taken to her former home in New York state for interment. Her death came as a great surprise to her many friends in the craft, as she had not been ill long and was supposed to be improving since the day of the crisis. Several members of the craft sent floral pieces, but many heard the sad news too late to send anything. Mr. Billingsley has the sympathy of the craft in his bereavement.

WE like the REVIEW better than ever and would not want to do without it—WM. DYER, Three Rivers, Mich.

FLINT, MICH.—B. Hasselbring has completed five modern greenhouses, 30 x140, and installed two eighty horse-power boilers. This gives him a fine plant of 50,000 square feet of glass.

CHICAGO.The Market.

Very large quantities of stock are being moved daily, but the market lacks the tone which it was hoped the frosty weather would give and the low grades are affording a good deal of trouble. Supplies are adequate all along the line, the cuts of Beauties even being equal to the demand. There are plenty of Brides and Maids, although not too many extra select, and Tuesday began to see another accumulation, almost before last week's lot had been worked off or dumped. Chatenay and Sunrise are abundant and good. Meteor is plentiful, but mostly bull-headed, but Liberty is in good shape and very plentiful, especially short-stemmed.

Carnations are very good indeed and there are enough for all needs. Chrysanthemums are not coming in so heavily as a few days ago but there are still more than can be moved at satisfactory figures. It is undoubted that the returns on 'mums this season are less than ever before in this market and Flint Kennicott says he thinks it is largely accounted for by the failure to hold a flower show to awaken public interest in the queen of autumn. Violets, valley and all the miscellaneous items of stock are abundant, including green goods.

Partnership Dissolved.

Peter Reinberg and Peter Weiland have dissolved partnership in the business at New Castle, Ind., and papers have been signed which will put the latter in full possession of the plant July 1, 1904. In the meantime each will operate one-half of the establishment, which consists of ten houses 300 feet long, a total of 90,000 feet of glass, half of which is devoted to Beauties and the whole place in very good shape. Mr. Weiland will send his cut to E. C. Ameling.

Various Notes.

On Sunday afternoon fire destroyed three greenhouses, several buildings and a tract of four square blocks of nursery stock at Graceland cemetery, the loss being estimated at $50,000.

Frank Garland cut Paper White narcissi on November 10. He has Harrisii a foot high and 15,000 bulbs potted up. He is forcing 112,000 Dutch bulbs and about 75,000 Paper Whites.

L. Coatsworth is visiting at his old home in Canada and enjoying a little good shooting.

Louis Gresenz, of Bassett & Washburn's, is happy over the safe arrival of a daughter, November 6.

Leonard Kill was at New Castle Tuesday and says all the growers have fine stock there. All the Beauties are good and Benthley's tea roses something out of the ordinary.

Mrs. A. C. Kohlbrand underwent a surgical operation at the West Side hospital November 4, and is now recuperating nicely.

C. M. Dickinson has been on the sick list for the past few days.

Peter Reinberg is at Effingham, Ill., with County Commissioner Flannigan, for ten days with the quail.

Mrs. Katherine Muno, the oldest resident of Rogers Park, died November 8, aged 91 years. She was an aunt of John Muno.

Gunnar Teilmann is sending in some very fine blooms of Lavender Queen chrysanthemum.

There are very good showings of chrysanthemums at all the parks.

Don't forget the flower show at the Atlas block next Tuesday and the supper to follow. Every man in the trade should be there.

Visitors: H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; A. C. Beal, Urbana, Ill.; E. J. Finney, Goshen, Ind.

PHILADELPHIA.The Market.

There is an awful glut of stuff in the market, with only fair business. Chrysanthemums are much overdone, also Beauties; in fact, all roses. Last week ended badly. Saturday brought a brisk demand for crimson and red and blue flowers for the big football game. H. H. Battles was especially busy for this occasion. A temporary rush of insanity, it was aptly styled. Gimbel Bros., continuing their show this week, helped matters somewhat. This firm, by the way, claims that over 100,000 people saw their show last Saturday. The funeral of Wm. L. Elkins on Tuesday, caused considerable demand for choice Ivory chrysanthemums, valley, etc. The Pennsylvania Society's annual fall show had a good effect on the demand for the queen of autumn.

Notes.

It is my melancholy duty to take a cipher off the very fine chrysanthemum order mentioned last week. It should have read 1,600. Now, lovely proof-reader, it may be nothing to you to demurely add a naught to my figures, but pray forbear or the town will be too hot for Phil.

Carl Jurgens, Jr., Newport, R. I., was in this city last month. This firm ships great quantities of valley and later in the season many varieties of bulbous flowers to Leo Niessen.

John C. Gracey held an opening on Friday of last week at his new store, 2034 Columbia avenue. The store is one of the finest in the city, affording ample opportunity for display. Many visitors crowded the place and all received souvenirs.

Charles H. Fox will open a new store at Broad and Sansom streets, it is understood, on Monday next.

Wm. J. Young, Jr., has turned the end of a greenhouse adjoining his office, into a tastefully arranged conservatory, filled with palms, ferns and flowering plants. It should prove an object lesson to his customers.

The Germantown Horticultural Society held its November meeting last Monday evening. There was a good attendance and a pretty display. N. Dubois Miller gave an interesting talk on an amateur's observations of the season.

The Henry A. Dreer Co. has sent out an immense quantity of its new golden pandanus. So well has this variety been propagated that they are still offering some of each size.

Robert Crawford, Jr., is at his post bright and smiling, showing visitors about his beautiful store.

The Florists' Club held a joyous smoker last Wednesday and many visitors were present. By the way, I am informed that plan of prepaying was not passed last week, but will be voted on next month.

Henry F. Michell Co. has good exhibits at all the local shows this week.

Joseph Heacock has a fine lot of 10-inch arecas on his palm factory at Wynecote.

The Philadelphia Carnation Co. is sending in some nice blooms of Enchantress and other fancy carnations. Their large mushroom plant is expected to be in crop early next month.

Edwin Lonsdale has been over in New York this week judging the chrysanthemum society's show there.

The Flower Market.

The following letter sent by President Heacock to the stockholders of the Market is self-explanatory. The account given last week was based on the opinion for which the special meeting was called and it was believed would be accepted by the present management:

At a special meeting of the stockholders of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market, held Nov. 3, called to take action on the proposed amendments to the by-laws, 430 shares being represented out of a total issue of 595 shares, the amendment to article 1, section 7, to change the beginning of the fiscal year to July 1, was carried unanimously. This section will now read: "The fiscal year of this company be, and it is hereby fixed to commence on the first day of July of each year, and to close on the thirtieth day of June."

The second amendment, proposing that condition 1, section 1, of article IV, reading, "No stockholder in this corporation shall hold, own, or be entitled to vote on more than fifty shares of said capital stock," be stricken out. The tellers reported that there were 367 shares voted in favor of this amendment, and 60 shares voted against the amendment. The president decided the amendment carried.

This notice is sent in pursuance of section I, article VIII, which says, "A copy of such amended by-law shall be sent to each stockholder within ten days after the adoption of same."

PHIL.

PITTSBURG.The Market.

The cut flower business last week was fairly good, but not brisk enough to use up the supply of stock. Chrysanthemums are very numerous and of course they are the leading feature in the market just now. First-class blooms can be bought at $8 per hundred, a few blooms of fancy grade bring $3 per dozen, but they are choice. Weak-necked stock has no value at all and is a drug on the market. A less number of pink chrysanthemums are grown in this vicinity this season, for what reason I am unable to state, but I am informed there is a demand for more than the supply.

American Beauties are more than abundant and hard to move at fair prices. Specials and extra grades are the best sellers. Medium and short-stemmed are sold as low as $2 per hundred. In tea roses there was no selling pressure, and at the same time no aggressive buying; specials and extras find ready sale, but first and seconds are a glut. Carnations of the fancy sort are more plentiful and are offered at $2 per hundred. Some fancy Lawsons brought $3. Violets continue plentiful and find a light demand.

Various Notes.

Geddis & Blind Brothers, Ltd., opened up for business last week.

E. C. Ludwig made up a large "gates ajar" from immortelles and artificial flowers, which was shipped to Scotland.

Randolph & McClements are keeping a number of men busy out doors, planting bulbs and herbaceous plants.

Patrick Maier, who succeeded Charles Koenig, is busy planting bulbs for forcing.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is displaying holiday material and supplies of new and pretty design.

F. Brittenbaugh & Bros. were busy with funeral work last week.

John Baldinger, who met with such a painful accident last week, is slowly improving.

W. B. Ague has opened a store in the Mohler building, Penn and Negley avenues, East End.

Visitors: P. J. Watson; representing S. S. Pennock, Philadelphia; B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, and M. Beers, New York.

Club Notes.

If you were absent from the last meeting of the Florists' Club you missed one of the best shows of chrysanthemums ever held here. Our indefatigable president, Wm. Falconer, secured all the new and late varieties of chrysanthemums. Every bloom was taken up singly and its merits thoroughly discussed. Enthusiasm was shown until the last bloom was inspected. The meeting was the best attended one we have had for some time and four new names were proposed. These meetings, much better called a school of floriculture and horticulture, with Mr. Falconer as quiz-master, are invaluable and not a meeting should be missed. I hope that every member of the club will attend the next meeting, December 1, and bring his friends. Christmas material is the subject. Some of the old time boys, Wm. Clarke, L. I. Neff, Samuel McClements, Julius Ludwig and E. B. Ludwig will give practical demonstrations of uses. Hoo-Hoo.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The past week brought the largest business of the season. The demand was far above expectations and even short stemmed roses sold well. This week is starting off much in the same fashion. All retailers seem to be doing a very good business. The demand for chrysanthemums has continued since All Saints' day and good prices continue, although the supply of large blooms has greatly increased. The sudden cold spell cut down the supply of roses and this in a way helped sustain the mum market. Col. Appletons are now almost cut out and we are sorry to see this grand sort go, notwithstanding that a certain per cent come malformed. Bonnaffon is now coming well and as yet there is no yellow to take its place. In whites Silver Wedding has been the best so far. Chadwick will soon be coming and if it is in anything like last year's form, it will be hard to find a better. It ranks right up with Appleton. Very few Eatons have made their appearance, and it is just as well, as aside from its large size this mum has very few points that commends itself to the trade. At present there is a very heavy demand for small mums suitable for funeral work. Also for stock to sell at $6 and $8 per 100, which is a very good selling size for the average retailer.

Carnations continue scarce, with very little sign of an increase in supply. There are not enough violets to go around. Callas are beginning to come in large quantities.

Various Notes.

Saturday will be the annual chrysanthemum show of the Florists' Society. Wm. Schuman will have charge of the exhibits. Besides the regular prizes the society will again award the silver and bronze S. A. F. medals for most meritorious plant or flower of American origin. These medals will be competed for at this and subsequent shows given by the society, but will not be awarded until the last show of the season.

The B. K. & B. Floral Co., of Richmond, is sending in some of the finest Appleton seen in this city. Their Richmond Gem is the best red carnation on the market so far.

Chas. E. Critchell, manager of the Atlanta Floral Co. store and greenhouses, at Atlanta, Ga., formerly a Cincinnati boy, and Miss Emma J. Inloes, of Hartwell, O., will be married November 18.

Wm. Mann, formerly bookkeeper for the Cincinnati Cut Flower Co., is now occupying a similar position with the Ohio Cut Flower Co.

Mr. Dieterich, of Maysville, Ky., was a visitor. C. J. OHMER.

PACIFIC COAST.

MENLO PARK, CAL.—The first fall exhibition of the Menlo Park Horticultural Society, held October 23 and 24, was even more successful than anticipated. The display was really too extensive for the hall, which is the largest in the town. Most of the exhibits were by gardeners on the private estates, but the commercial men were well represented. Sidney Clack was manager of the show and was also an exhibitor, receiving first prizes for vase of new carnations (Enchantress) and best twelve white chrysanthemums. M. Lynch made a fine general display of plants and flowers not for competition. The plants included a specimen of the new Pandanus Sanderi. The private gardeners participating included Messrs. Fred Miller, Geo. Nunn, M. Carter, S. P. Fisher, Andrew McDonald, Thos. McIntyre, W. Kettlewell, Wm. Eldred and J. Hanson. It is the intention of the society to hold a spring show next year.

PLANT NOTES.

Christmas will soon be upon us and florists will find this a good time to look over their available stock for the holidays. The people of California are very fond of flowers, and flowering plants at this time are sure to be in good demand.

Potted bulbous stock is always a good seller and Dutch and Roman hyacinths are the first on the list. We put about three to five Roman hyacinths in a 5 or 6-inch pot and have no difficulty in retailing them at 50 cents. The Dutch hyacinths sell about the same price and one large flower is all that is necessary for selling it at a handsome profit. Valley is generally transplanted, about half a dozen in a 5-inch pot, and sells readily at $1.

Chinese primulas are sold singly in 3 or 4-inch pots and they can be handled nicely in 8 or 9-inch fern pans, planting about five of assorted colors in each pot. We retailed a great many of them during last season's holidays at $1.50 to $2 per jar. Freesias and tulips are good sellers and can be handled very easily at splendid profits.

We received last season large quantities of poinsettias from Los Angeles that were outside grown. The only trouble I found with them was that they did not hold their leaves well and although the flowers kept well enough the stems looked very shabby. Assortments of small growing ferns planted in fern dishes and strong pots of maidenhair are in good demand.

Kentia Belmoreana and Forsteriana are our best selling palms, although Cycas revoluta, rhaps and arecas are close seconds. Phoenix canariensis and many other palms are perfectly hardy here in California and are not much used for interior decorations. Japanese fern baskets had a large sale several years ago but they do not seem to be in much demand this season. Asparagus Sprengeri in baskets and Asparagus plumosus in pots must not be overlooked, as they are about as satisfactory an article as anyone wants to handle and one of the few house plants the general public seems to be able to keep alive for any length of time. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business during the past week has been quiet enough to suit any one. There is both a scarcity of funerals and also of society functions, and most of our florists have an idea there will be very little doing until Thanksgiving. The chrysanthemum is still queen of the market and the quality of the stock offered is thoroughly up to color and form. Prices rule very low and the best outside grown Bonnaffon can be bought for $1.50 per hundred. We had a heavy downpour of rain on Tuesday and some of the growers thought that outdoor stock would suffer, but everything dried up in a few hours and is now in better shape than ever. Carnations are good and cheap. I think they are twenty-five per cent cheaper than at this time last year. The reasons are, first, our continued warm, bright weather, and, secondly, the large amount of stock offered by new growers. I think there are not less than twenty new establishments started in the last year in the neighborhood of San Francisco.

Roses are plentiful, excepting Beauties. Bridesmaid, Bride, Kaiserin and Testout can be had at from 50 to 75 cents per dozen wholesale, and they are of very good quality. Violets are getting better than they were a week ago, owing to the rain, but price still remains at $1 per dozen bunches. Outside flowers are getting scarce. We still have some gailardias and dahlias, but most of the other stock is out of season.

Notes.

A very well attended flower show was held in San Mateo last week and some of our well known growers took most of the prizes. Wm. Eldred, Wm. McDonald and Thomas Breen took the first prizes for chrysanthemum blooms. W. Kettlewell first prize for dahlias. Fick & Faber first prizes for carnations and roses and H. G. Hardy first prize for ferns. G.

OSAGE, IA.—Walter S. Hall has had an "opening" at his greenhouses this week, a musical festival and illumination. He sent out hand bills and as one feature advertised the Happy Hooligan K. of P. band, and as another "Old Folks' Day," Wednesday afternoon, offering to send a carriage for any one who would 'phone or send a postal. An admission of ten cents was charged in the evening.

ALMA, MICH.—W. O. Thomas has sold his greenhouse to Steve Coleman, who is removing it to his place.

GARDENING UNDER GLASS

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Charles Chadwick is building a new greenhouse 450 feet long, which will be used for forcing lettuce.

FORCING ASPARAGUS.

As far as the forcing of this vegetable is concerned, it is quite a simple matter, as it is well adapted as a forcing subject, requiring only about three weeks from time of starting until it is fit to cut if the proper conditions are provided. The procuring of suitable plants is often the most troublesome part, unless the plants are home-grown, and when it is intended to go into asparagus forcing to any great extent it will pay to grow them at home. Here they can be lifted and placed in the forcing quarters without any check through the roots being exposed to the drying influence of the air, but when shipped from a distance more or less drying and consequent loss of vitality is bound to occur through the soil being all shaken from the roots. We like to get them, if possible, with soil adhering. We have used two-year-old crowns where they were very strong, but find as a general rule that those three years old are more profitable, the stalks produced being not only more numerous but considerably stronger.

We have seen asparagus forced under greenhouse benches and such places, but in such situations it is hard to produce a first-class article. We have obtained the best results in pits. Our pits are about four feet deep and built of brick, heated by one 4-inch hot water pipe, which runs right around the pit about one foot from the top. We begin operations by putting about two feet of stable litter in the bottom of the pit. This we pack as firmly as possible. Clean sand is then added to a depth of three inches. As the manure generates more heat than the roots will stand, time is allowed for the surplus heat to work off.

When the temperature has fallen to 60 degrees we consider it safe to set the plants. We set them just as close as the adhering soil will allow, then cover with from three to four inches of sand. Enough water is then given to settle the sand around the roots, but not enough to soak the manure. The heat is regulated by air to 75 degrees in the day time and enough air is left on over night to allow surplus vapor to escape while the manure is still fresh. Later on enough fire heat is supplied to maintain a top night temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees. Frequent waterings are necessary and should be given whenever the sand shows signs of dryness. Cutting should begin in from three to four weeks and should be attended to every morning after the points begin to appear. When the crop is over the roots can be thrown out and replaced by fresh ones. The same hotbed will retain heat long enough to force several batches.

W. S. CROYDON.

MARINETTE, WIS.—George Vatter has 2,000 chrysanthemum plants this season and a nice trade. He added 4,000 feet of glass last summer, making a total of 18,000 feet.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. B. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THE early wholesale lists quote Evergreen corn at $4.40 to $4.50 per bushel.

THE cactus dahlia Florence M. Stredwick is a white variety of great promise to be introduced next season by an English grower.

CHAS. P. BRASLAN, of the Braslan Seed Growers Co., San Jose, Cal., expects to start on his annual eastern business trip shortly.

VISITED PHILADELPHIA: Alfred Emerich, Paris; James Comont, of Carter, Dunnett & Beal, London England, who will sail for home about Thanksgiving.

VISITED CHICAGO: Lester C. Morse, C. R. Kimberlin and W. J. Fosgate, Santa Clara, Cal.; D. S. Sloan, of D. S. Sloan & Son, Palo Alto, Cal.; Joe L. Ullathorne, of Ullathorne Seed Co., Memphis, Tenn.

THE A. J. Brown Seed Co., of Grand Rapids, has leased an adjoining double store and is installing bean picking machines which will give a capacity of two carloads of beans a day.

SEVERAL shipments of seeds in bond from Europe to Chicago have arrived this week. It is thought that this year the importers will not have as much trouble clearing seeds as they had last year and year before.

JOHN SCHEEPERS, of Hillegom, Holland, will exhibit a new tuberous rooted begonia at the St. Louis World's Fair, it being his intention to offer it to the American trade next year. Mr. Scheepers is now in New York.

FIVE dollars per bushel seems to be the prevailing value placed upon the canners' varieties of sweet corn. No sales of any account have been made at this price, but some owners of the article are holding stiff for it.

IN Chicago the past week some of the pickle men expressed a willingness to pay $1.50 per pound for Chicago Pickling cucumber seed; $2.50 per pound was asked for 200 pounds of this variety, but the deal was not closed.

IT is stated that D. V. Burrell, the Rocky Ford, Colo., seedsman who went to Chicago a week or two back to be treated at the Pasteur Institute for a bite from a mad dog, has returned home and that the treatment was successful.

PHILADELPHIA.—There has been quite a perceptible lull in business the past week. All lines, with the exception of bulbs, have been very quiet. Traveling men report very little doing and some of these have been as far west as Denver, Col. With the uncertainties of being able to secure stock of many kinds of melons, cucumbers, beans and sweet corn, together without any definite idea as to the probable prices that are likely to rule later, buyers do not seem inclined to order until the last minute.

C. P. Coy & Son, Waterloo, Neb., have sent out the following: "As our cucumber crops are now being harvested and received, we are meeting with serious disappointments. In fact, some varieties that promised fairly good results are giving us very little seed indeed. We had sufficient fruits in sight on the ground to make previous estimates good, or nearly so, but are now finding that from one-half to two-thirds of the seed in the fruits is of unmerchantable quality, being light, chaffy, and undeveloped. Some varieties that we hoped to make a small showing on we will not be able to make any delivery whatever, while indications now point to a decrease of thirty to fifty per cent below former estimates all along the line. The situation at present is such that it is impossible to make an intelligent estimate until the crops are actually in the warehouse and milled up. We regret that we cannot give something definite as to deliveries, but be prepared for extreme shortages."

THE LANDRETH FAILURE.

On November 6 Bayard Henry was appointed receiver for the firm of D. Landreth & Sons, Philadelphia, the oldest seed house in America. A meeting of the creditors was held on July 20 and a committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the firm in hopes that a way out of its financial troubles might be found. This committee found the unsecured liabilities to be $123,946.64. Real estate is owned subject to mortgages of $155,000, which leaves little equity. The assets were estimated at $134,197.36 as a going concern or at $53,545.98 at forced sale. It was recommended that the creditors accept settlement at fifty per cent of their claims in notes maturing in installments up to July 15, 1905, but this was not acceptable to some of the banks involved, and the bankruptcy proceedings have resulted. The business was established in 1784, by David Landreth, and has since been conducted by members of the family.

ALL sorts of tree seeds are reported scarce and hard to get in Tennessee. The September frosts killed the tops of the catalpas, but it does not hurt them for lining out. Trade is better than ever for fall.

C. S. HARRISON, York, Neb., has just returned from a trip to the U. S. reservation in Colorado and is out with a plea for its opening as another national park. Mr. Harrison is president of the Nebraska Park and Forestry Association.

E. W. KIRKPATRICK, of McKinney, Tex., president of the Texas Nurserymen's Association, is one of the foremost authorities on the pecan. He says that the people have not yet realized the money-making possibilities in this nut. Pecan culture is still one of the great undeveloped industries of the south. Prof. W. A. Taylor, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, has recently been in Texas inspecting the results of Mr. Kirkpatrick's work on the improvement of varieties.

These are Monday's prices. From Monday to Friday the bottom can fall out of anything. It did last week and it may this, although it seems as though the limit had been reached. Even the low prices quoted are far above values at the sacrifices the wholesalers have to make to dispose of the accumulation.

BOSTON.
The annual chrysanthemum exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was one of the best on record, opening on Wednesday, November 5, and continuing until Sunday night. The weather was not favorable, yet the attendance was good. There was the usual large display of specimen bush plants, the Boston show always excelling all others in this particular. The showing of cut blooms was also up to the highest standard, although not many of this season's novelties were on display. The exhibitors were, as heretofore, principally the private growers of the vicinity, including J. S. Bailey, E. S. Converse, H. Dumaresq, E. A. Clark, Jas. Nicol, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, J. E. Rothwell, Miss E. J. Clark, P. W. Moen, P. B. Robb, C. S. Sias, Mrs. E. M. Gill, Col. Chas. Pfaff and many others. The Breitmeyer rose was certificated, also a new pink chrysanthemum, Dr. Englehardt, shown by W. A. Manda. L. H. Foster showed his Nephrolepis, Farquhar's staged Lorraine begonias and Lager & Hurrell made a fine show of orchids.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Up to last week Wednesday evening we had fine summer weather, with open cars on all the street car lines. Since then we have had rain and snow, with real winter weather, which has caused a little let-up in the cut of roses and carnations, and it certainly was welcome to the larger growers, who have been in full crop, and could not move the cut at any price.

The wholesale florists report business for the past week as being poorer than that of last July and August, and good carnations could be bought for $7.50 per 1,000, and roses from $10 to $15 per 1,000. Chrysanthemums ran from $3 to $10 per 100 and were slow sellers at any price.

Notes.

Bramley & Son are well satisfied with natural gas for fuel, and claim that they get much better results from it than they did last year from good coal. They have been cutting some very nice mums, and fortunately have had a steady run of funeral work that has used all of their stock as soon as it was fit to cut.

J. Kirschner has decided not to put the gas in this year and has piled up a fine lot of coal that will last him this winter. He has been doing a nice business the past week and has used up all the cut flowers sent in from his place at South Euclid.

F. W. Ziechmann has the natural gas under his boilers and expects to effect a large saving in his fuel bill. His mums are a little late this year.

Gordon Gray is cutting some very fine mums this season and keeps them moving out on orders. E.

MONTREAL.

It is with pleasure that I record the largest attendance the club has had for many a day, November 2. The boys also are really active in securing new candidates; in fact, two new members were elected, Messrs. Arthur Robertson, superintendent of Westmount park, and Ernest Beadburry, of Outremont. D. J. Sinclair, of Toronto, who offers to make an exhibit of florists' supplies at our next chrysanthemum show, was received with pleasure. A paper from Mr. Kean, treating on roses, was well appreciated; it was unfortunate that the gentleman was absent through illness.

We are having ideal weather, and if it continues for a few days more we will surely make our chrysanthemum show a success.

The young but prosperous Lachine Horticultural Society, at its annual meeting, elected to the presidential chair T. J. Church. C. A. Smitz was chosen vice-president and Gabriel Vreugde secretary and treasurer. The society decided to give its annual dinner on December 12 and all the boys of Montreal will be present at that event.

OSSINING, N. Y.
I have used your FUMIGATING POWDER for some years and I have always found it first-class; there is no danger of it killing anything except the green fly, which it does with dispatch. I never use anything else for insecticide, nor do I wish anything better.
Yours truly,
C. BARSON.

BATH, ME.
We use your Fumigating Powder and we are never troubled with aphids; it does not harm the blooms in the least, and we find it the cheapest way to fumigate—and we have tried everything that is on the market.

Yours truly,

After using your Fumigating Powder I must say that in fifteen years' experience with various methods of killing aphids, I find this the most effectual and economical method I have yet tried.

Yours respectfully,
GEORGE W. THORNILY.

BAYSIDE, N. Y.
I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.

Yours truly,
WM. BELL.

PROFITABLE BUSINESS.

Do your customers know that you can execute orders for the prompt delivery of cut flowers or floral designs for any occasion, anywhere in the United States? Why not let them know? Such business is easily handled and affords a fair profit.

Many leading retailers display neat signs in their windows announcing that they can deliver flowers in any city in the United States for funerals or any other purpose. Another way would be to print such a sentence on bills and letter heads, or a neatly printed card might be enclosed in each package where the proprietors would permit, or it might be mailed to your list of customers in the form of an announcement. As soon as it becomes known that you can deliver funeral pieces a thousand miles away at a few hours' notice you will have a steady call for such service.

The page of "Leading Retail Florists" which appears regularly in this paper affords the means of filling orders in every principal city in the United States. This page is open only to firms of known standing and whose equipment is adequate to meet any calls of this character. Most of them already do a considerable amount of business on mail or telegraphic orders.

RUSHVILLE, IND.—A good-sized addition to the City Greenhouses during the summer gives them greatly increased facilities. With a fine lot of 'mums they find trade good.

PROPAGATING THE POTATO.

Potato Northern Star is just now occupying the attention of growers in the British Isles. The variety is very productive and is disease resistant. The skin and flesh are white, the eyes usually situated at either end, and when the tubers are lifted the embryo growths in the eyes are pink in color, which is a good means of identification. It is a good cooker. The seed tubers have been so high in price that the growers have propagated with great pains. One gardener became possessed of two pounds of tubers, which came carefully packed in cotton. He started them in a flat in the greenhouse and took off cuttings as the shoots appeared, and May 26 planted 200 in the open ground. On September 22 he is reported to have lifted a crop weighing 420 pounds from his two pounds of seed. J. W. Malden also topped his plants when they had grown a few inches and planted the cuttings just as though they were pelargoniums. Each eye served to start a plant, and he was able to plant an acre of land with 175 pounds of seed. The plants were set thirty inches apart, in rows thirty-two inches asunder. Of course, to make a success of this method it is necessary to begin early, not later than March, because the cuttings must be nice little plants in pots by the time for planting outdoors.

LAKE GENEVA, WIS.—Frank Augesky is putting up a greenhouse, 60x100, for H. C. Lytton, who contemplates another soon.

CARTHAGE, MO.—Perry Finn is building another greenhouse 200 feet long as an addition to his facilities for forcing vegetables.

HAMPTON, IA.—The Curtis Floral Co. has just completed an addition of 5,000 feet of glass, also installing a new heating plant.

ENCLOSED is a check for another dollar for subscription. The florist's best friend is his bank account; next comes the FLORISTS' REVIEW. It is a pleasure and a profit to sit down in the shade on a summer day or in one's warm office in winter and read what our brother florists over the whole country are doing.—C. W. EIFLER, Altoona, Pa.

ETHERIZATION OF PLANTS.

E. Jannoch writes to an English magazine: "As my name was mentioned in connection with the etherization of plants, it may interest your readers to know that my further experiments this autumn have proved very satisfactory, and were quite beyond expectation. Lilacs that were etherized on August 24, were in full bloom and foliage by September 18, and subsequent batches which I etherized are all doing well and growing with a rapidity quite amazing. So far I can only speak of lilacs with a certainty of success, but I am experimenting with other plants, such as Azalea mollis, deutzias, funkias, spiræas, prunus, variegated maple, wistaria, etc., and I feel confident of success when the experiments are completed. Respecting the blooms of lilacs, I find that from etherized plants, they are finer and last longer than from retarded plants, a fact which speaks well in favor of etherization."

TEREE HAUTE, IND.—Fred G. Heintz says things are pursuing their usual course, with no unusual features in the business situation.

EVERETT, WASH.—A Seattle florist is trying to do business here, and the result is price-cutting, which leaves no profit for anybody.

I RECENTLY saw a copy of Scott's Manual and don't understand how any up-to-date florist can afford to do without it; I enclose $5; send me a copy at once.—A. L. RAUB, Easton, Pa.

WE feel that we could not get along without the REVIEW, as it gives us valuable information we need every day in our business.—ADGATE & SON, Warren, Ohio.

WE enclose a dollar for another year of the REVIEW. Your paper we consider the best paper, for both the experienced and inexperienced, of any of the florists' papers; we could not think of doing business without.—W. J. MILLER & SON, Pontiac, Ill.

THE EXHIBITIONS

NEW YORK.

Your regular correspondent will doubtless send you the awards individually, so I will confine myself to generalities and impressions of the show as a whole. Of course it was primarily a chrysanthemum show, and as such in all probability was the finest collection of high grade flowers ever brought together in America. Great credit is due the firms of E. G. Hill, Nathan Smith & Son and H. W. Buckbee for their enterprise in bringing plants and flowers such a distance and being able to win prizes after that. While there was an immense quantity of high grade flowers on exhibition, the number would have been trebled had the show been held a week or ten days earlier, for the exceedingly warm fall brought out all the varieties in a flood and all the exhibitors complain of the difficulty of holding their flowers long enough to exhibit.

In the commercial classes, A. Herrington, the president, covered himself with glory, winning some fourteen first prizes, Hill, Smith and Buckbee being also prominent, Hill winning on fifty yellow with Percy Plumridge, Appleton and the Eatons being still prominent in these classes. In the collection of thirty varieties fine displays were made by Hill and Smith, many of the novelties appearing in these classes.

In the special classes, W. Duckham, gardener to D. Willis James, Madison, N. J., exhibited some wonderful flowers, chiefly novelties. He won the C. S. A. silver cup with W. Duckham, which was easily the finest vase in the entire show.

He also won the special sweepstakes cup for twenty-five best flowers of all the different societies' prize winners. This was a grand lot of flowers, novelties being here prominent. Chief among them were W. Duckham, a magnificent pink; General Hutton, an immense bronzy yellow; Ben Wells, a reflexed white; Cheltoni, Leila Filkins, Mary Inglis and other immense flowers. These new varieties, as shown by Mr. Duckham and also Nathan Smith & Son and E. G. Hill, were the star attraction for the professional element.

Pompons were shown in immense variety and extent, R. Vincent, Jr. & Son, of White Marsh, Md., being the chief prize winners. On chrysanthemum plants the Boston grower, D. F. Roy, divided the honors with H. W. Buckbee, whose standards were fine. Vaughan had his grafted specimen in this class. In the foliage plant classes, J. L. Childs, Julius Roehrs and Siebrecht were represented, and in the orchid section Lager & Hurrell and J. Roehrs put up extensive displays, the first named in particular being represented by many magnificent specimens. Miscellaneous displays of evergreens were made by Bobbink & Atkins and other exhibitors.

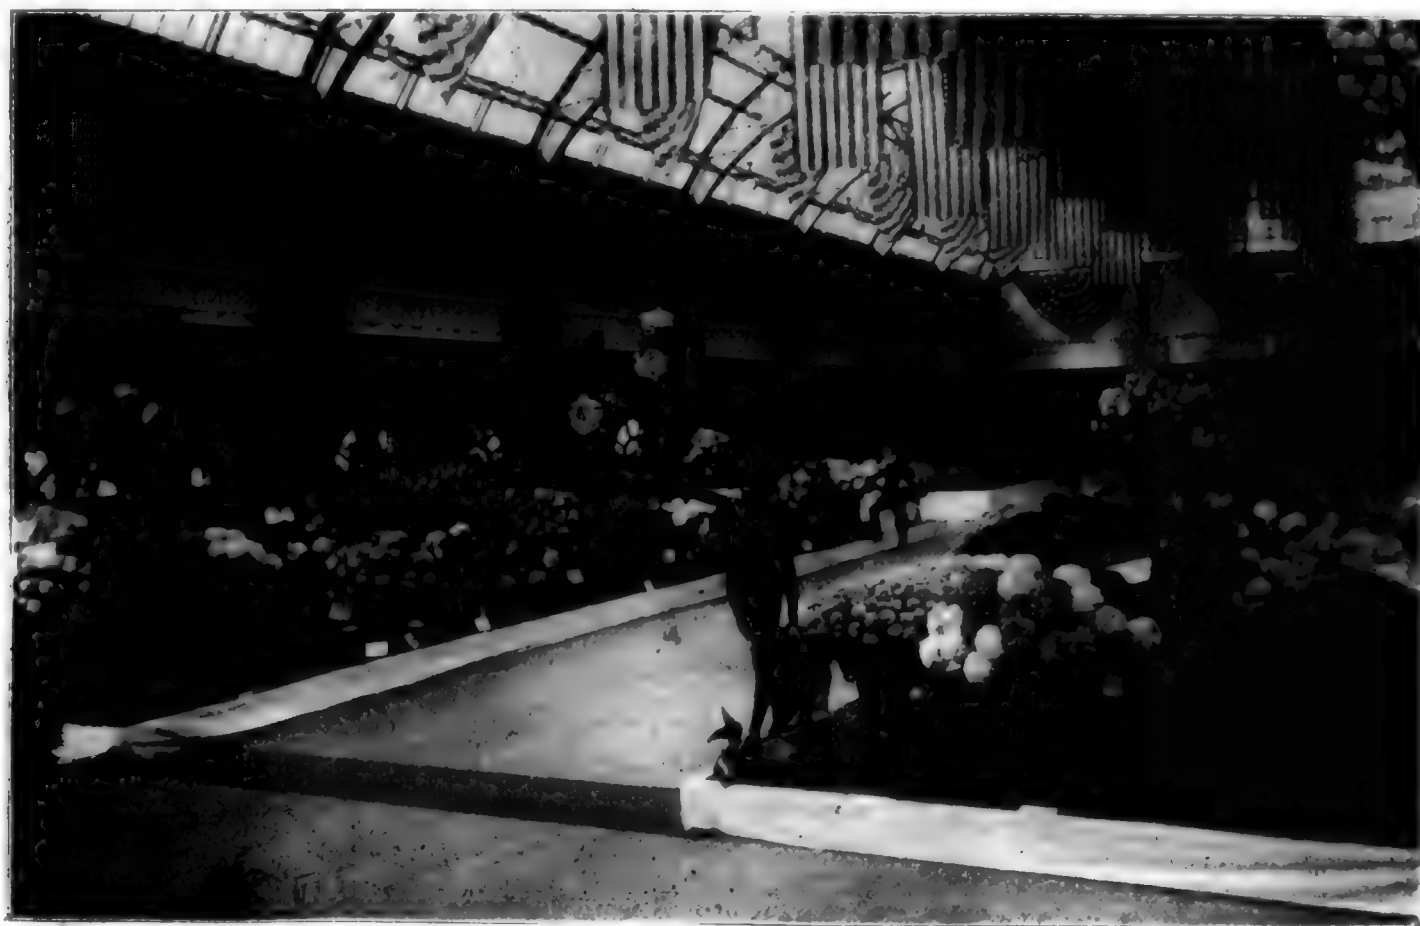

The exhibition of roses was, as is usual in New York, small in extent, the Madison men, L. A. Noe and J. R. Mitchell, being the chief winners. There were several new seedlings from Mr. Cook, of Baltimore, set up, also the Breitmeyer rose and a very sweet smelling novelty from J. N. May, called General McArthur.

Carnations could not be called an extensive exhibit, though there were some high grade flowers from C. W. Ward and others, M. A. Patten showing up well, as did also Flamingo and Albatross. John N. May set up the Bride in excellent condition, apparently a good white, very fine and very neat in appearance.

W. Wells, of England, sent a collection of novelties in chrysanthemums, that, considering the distance they had to travel and the time they were in transit, were in good condition. They looked much smaller than the ones he sent over last year, but a man who has sufficient enterprise to ship flowers over 3,000 miles is deserving of every commendation. Possibly the flowers would not have looked so small, anyway, had there not been such record-breaking monsters set up by local growers.

I think all the exhibitors set up finer flowers than ever before, notably William Scott and David McFarlane, of Tarrytown, and Peter Duff, of Orange; but the king of them all was certainly Wm. Duckham, whose flowers were, I honestly believe, never equalled in any exhibition. Outside of the novelties he set up, which were immense, his vases of Mrs. Thirkell, W. R. Church and other standard varieties (comparison of which could easily be made with the flowers of the other exhibitors) stood out pre-eminent, overlaying everything in size, yet retaining fine form and finish. Mr. Duckham spends much time and money every year importing all the best novelties, and he probably has done more to raise the standard of exhibition flowers than any other man in the country.

There were a host of smaller, interesting features that escape me at this moment, but they all helped to make up a show that was of surpassing interest. It was somewhat of a surprise to me to see the hall packed in the evenings so that it was difficult to move about. The promoters of the show should certainly feel encouraged now that they have at last demonstrated that New York can hold a successful flower show. New York is evidently New York when it likes to get down to business.

A. Herrington was, of course, re-elected president. No one would hear of anything else at the meeting and, after the tremendous exhibit he made, it was only as it should be. F. R. Pierson retired as vice-president and Elmer D. Smith was elected in his place. This was the only change in the personnel of the officers. There seems a whisper in the air to hold the next meeting of the society at Boston.

The judges at the show were nine in number, as follows: Eugene Daille-douze, Chas. H. Totty, Professor Cowell, John Ash, Wm. Turner, Wm. Plumb, Edwin Lonsdale, Elmer D. Smith and Wm. Nicholson. B.

CHICAGO.

The second exhibition of the Chicago Florists' Club, held Tuesday, November 17, in the Atlas block, was a marked advance over the one a month ago. The first of these shows was memorable for the fine showings of chrysanthemums staged by growers from a distance; this exhibition was notable for the wonderful exhibits of roses and carnations by our home producers. Seldom have better roses been staged in any exhibition and certainly at no large show was the average quality of the carnations so high. While the sensational vases may have been few, there was not a poor bunch of flowers in the hall.

Leonard Kill was manager of the show and had everything ready in good time. Owing to his efforts the exhibits were large and the exhibitors numerous, with the result that the hall proved too small for the occasion. From two to four o'clock the public was admitted by card and the aisles were so thronged as to make it difficult to move about the room. The successes of these first two shows should certainly warrant the committee in making preparations on a larger scale for the next exhibition to which the public is to be invited.

In roses Peter Reinberg, Wictor Bros., J. A. Budlong, and the Chicago Carnation Company, were the exhibitors. Reinberg showed a splendid vase of his new sort, Uncle John, an improved Golden Gate and one which everyone connected with the establishment believes is destined to supplant Gate. He also had a vase of Mme. Chatenay in as good shape as that rose is ever seen. Other sorts were Beauty, Liberty, La France, Perle, Bride, Maid, Kaiserin, Ivory, Sunrise and Golden Gate all in good form.

Wictor Bros. showed what many thought was the finest vase in the hall, Liberty in as perfect shape as that rose is ever grown. They also staged Bride, La France, Beauty, Ivory, Meteor, Maid and Golden Gate, each sort being in commendable form.

The Chicago Carnation Company made the largest display in the hall, their pot of Maids being particularly noteworthy. Their other roses were Beauty, Bride and Golden Gate. But it was, of course, on carnations that they were strongest, and in the center was the vase of Fiancee in even better form than heretofore shown, and with it was the Foley cup awarded Fiancee at Joliet. Mr. Hartshorne also staged a fine vase of Moonlight, John Hartje's new white. All of Mr. Hartshorne's stock was in prime shape, including Dorothy Whitney, No. 229, Mrs. Higinbotham, Harlowarden, Sibyl, McKinley, Alba, Her Majesty, Crusader, Stella, Lillian Pond, Nelson, Prosperity, Mrs. Palmer, Reliance, Lawson and Enchantress.

J. A. Budlong showed Beauty, Bride, Maid and Gate in good form, also excellent chrysanthemums, including Maud Dean, Murdock and Eaton.

Weiland & Risch sent up some very fine blooms of Timothy Eaton, Murdock and Viviand-Morel.

The out-of-town exhibitors, for we don't call Joliet out-of-town, were Fred Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette; Baur & Smith and John Hartje, of Indianapolis. Fred Dorner, Jr., brought Lady Bounti-

F. R. Pierson's Exhibit at the New York Exhibition.

(Chrysanthemum Dr. Eaglehardt in center)

Six Mme. Carnot, A. Herrington.

Six Yellow Carnot, A. Herrington.

Twelve blooms, four varieties, novelties of 1903, D. McFarlane, gardener to Jos. Eastman, Tarrytown; A. Herrington second.

Thirty-six blooms, six varieties, Wm. Duckham; H. W. Buckbee second.

Eighteen blooms, six varieties, A. Herrington; Wm. Duckham second.

Five any variety in commerce, A. Herrington; Robert Mallory, Portchester, N. Y., second.

Six any white of 1902, Wm. Duckham.

Ten any American seedling, special prizes to Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich.

five blooms, to Wm. Duckham. For twelve blooms, to A. Herrington.

Monmouth County Society, for thirty-five blooms, to E. D. Adams, Seabright, N. J.

New Jersey Floricultural Society, for twelve blooms, to J. C. Brown, Orange; C. Hathaway, East Orange, second.

Lawrence-Cedarhurst Society, for twenty-five blooms, to G. C. Rand; for twelve blooms, to T. J. Taylor.

Tuxedo Society, for twelve blooms, to W. Hastings; H. W. Poor second.

E. G. Hill prize for seedling not in commerce, to N. Smith & Son, W. A. Manda second.

ful and The Belle, their two good whites, and a fine vase of mixed seedlings. A. F. J. Baur came with Indianapolis, their prolific bright pink, which makes a favorable impression wherever shown, and Mr. Hartje sent Moonlight, but it did not travel well.

W. N. Rudd staged Phyllis and No. 2001A, a fine red seedling.

Anton Then staged Mrs. Nelson, Sibyl, Wolcott, Her Majesty, White Cloud, No. 122, and one or two blooms each of several other seedlings. The Thompson Company also staged several vases of carnations, and H. Hansen put up a good vase of Higinbotham. John Reardon also brought a fine lot of Lawson.

Frank Garland brought two pots of Paper White narcissi and a carnation seedling, No. 15. L. J. Stankowicz showed two white seedlings, Mrs. Hearst and No. 11.

Bassett & Washburn sent a vase of very good 'mums and E. H. Hunt a bunch of good violets.

In plants the George Witthold Co. sent a big lot of commercial sizes in palms and ferns. Anton Then had a nice lot of cyclamens. John Reardon had two well flowered chrysanthemums. Sunstone. Vaughan showed ferns and solanums, with one pot of Golden Chadwick chrysanthemums. E. S. Thompson brought gladiolus bulbs and Geo. L. Stiles, of Oklahoma City, brought some very fine mistletoe.

Bentley & Co.'s shipment of roses for the show did not arrive in time to be staged, but were very fine.

At the closing hour eighty-three florists adjourned to supper, a purely informal affair at which the judges' report was read. They highly commended all the seedling carnations exhibited and gave honorable mention to the meritorious exhibits in the other departments of the show, specifying much of the stock named above. The $50 in prize money was distributed as follows: Five dollars each to Peter Reinberg, for Uncle John rose; to Wieter Bros., for Liberty; to the Chicago Carnation Co., for Maid; to F. Dorner & Sons Co., for seedling carnations; to Chicago Carnation Co., for Fiancee; to Thompson Co., for Wolcott; to Weiland & Risch, for Eaton; to Anton Then, for cyclamen; to J. A. Budlong, for general display.

Following the report of the judges Congressman J. J. Feeley spoke entertainingly, and F. S. Allen, of Joliet; A. F. J. Baur, of Indianapolis; G. L. Stiles, of Oklahoma, and M. G. Holding, of Chicago, were called on by President Rudd. Each made brief remarks.

BUFFALO.

The all important event of the week just closed was, of course, the H. A. Meldrum show. You hear frequently from brother florists who never would give us support when our Florists' Club held a show, some criticism that we should have to depend on a department store to hold a floral exhibition. If Pittsburg, Cleveland, Detroit and other cities of our size were holding successful exhibitions I would say there was something serious the matter with our town, or its people, or its florists, but they are not and the largest cities of the country cannot make the revenue meet the expenses. All honor the florists of these big cities, if they do persist in holding shows and putting their hands deep in their pockets to make up the deficits. The writer believes public exhibitions of our products do help the business all along the line, and if all in the trade would help the cause the burden would be light. But they do not, so we can see nothing but a benefit to us when an enterprising, liberal firm, such as the H. A. Meldrum Co. has proved to be, has the pluck and business insight to relieve us from all financial anxiety and give better premiums than any Florists' Club ever hopes to.

It was a success in every sense of the word. Weather ideal, crowds immense from morning to night, and here is a very good place to say that the firm was so well pleased with results that they will double the space for exhibits and double the amount of premiums in 1904.

A feature that was very gratifying was the number of brother florists who came from many points within a hundred miles, and some much farther. I know I missed many, but here are some who came and were well pleased: Mr. Hill, Jr., of Richmond, Ind., just like Papa, only taller and handsomer; Mr. Baur, of Erie, Pa.; Mr. Bennett, in charge of Nathan Smith & Son's exhibit; A. Krueger, of Meadville, Pa.; John Rudy, of Elmira; W. C. Rockwell, Bradford, Pa.; Roderick Cameron, Percy Lyons, George Piner, J. G. Robertson, Peter Murray, all of Niagara Falls, Ontario; T. Mansfield & Son, of Lockport; Mr. Craig, of Geneva; Mr. Michael, of Dansville, besides the stately judge, Geo. E. Fancourt, of Wilkesbarre, and on Friday, much to our pleasure, turned up President-elect Phil Breitmeyer and President Geo. Rackham. A feature of the exhibit which pleased the public much was the dinner tables set with full equipment of silver, glasses, linen, favors, etc., with chrysanthemum decoration. Mr. Breitmeyer and other gentlemen who certainly ought to know, pronounced them equal to any exhibit of the kind they had ever seen.

I trust it paid them, and supposing it did, we are still under an obligation to the E. G. Hill Co. and Nathan Smith & Son for the splendid displays of cut blooms they sent. In the class for 100 blooms, not less than twenty-five varieties, $50, $30 and $20, there were some great blooms and keen competition. In the Hill collection we noticed, of great excellence, Diedrich, creamy white; Jean Calvat, enormous old gold; La Fusion, flesh pink; Lucy Evans, lavender pink; H. W. Buckbee, fine yellow; McEneroy, bronze. In Nathan Smith's collection noticeable among many fine varieties was Dr. Oronhyatekha, a grand large yellow (but the name ought to kill the man and the flower); Col. Baden Powell, old rose pink; Silver Queen, light pink; Dazzler, bronze; M. C. Niccolaud, incurved white, and again, La Fusion. This firm also exhibited a vase of Golden Age, a flower of the Appleton type and the richest yellow. Mr. Marquisee, of Syracuse, was good enough to send a vase of his famous Flamingo carnation which showed up in fine form and for this season a wonderful stem. And then came from Detroit twenty-five beautiful flowers of Breitmeyer & Sons' nameless pink rose. "A hundred dollars in gold for a name." Thousands looked at the card and I dare say thought that could be easily earned. If others can grow this rose as Messrs. Breitmeyer do and show such blooms from plants propagated in April, then it's a great acquisition.

On Friday evening the craft gathered at a long table. Most of the visitors had escaped, except one, a notable one, the president-elect of the S. A. F., and Phil made us all feel good, not alone by his presence, but the good and sensible talk he gave. As for the rest it was very informal and mostly a "Mutual admiration society." A man who helps along these affairs very much is Mr. Syler, the advertising manager of the H. A. Meldrum Co. He is great little stuff and when he and Capt. Braik get together you have the long and the short, the big and the little, the diamond in the rough and the radiant pearl.

The judges who kindly officiated in relays of three were George E. Fancourt, James Braik, Charles Guenther, John Rudy, Philip Breitmeyer and Geo. Rackham.

Charles Keitsch, who has had entire charge of the exhibition and all preparations, acquitted himself in his usual able and modest manner and gave the utmost satisfaction to all concerned. As briefly as I can condense it, here are the awards:

INDIANAPOLIS.

Wednesday was special carnation day and we had by far the best and largest display of carnations ever seen at any of our fall shows. Only standard varieties could compete in the regular classes, but nearly all of the new candidates were shown in large lots. The F. Dorner & Sons Co., of Lafayette, showed their two fine whites, besides a large number of seedlings in lesser quantity. R. Witterstaetter, of Cincinnati, showed an improved Estelle which attracted much attention by its fine color. The B. K. & B. Co., of Richmond, showed their Richmond Gem in good shape. This looks like a bread-and-butter carnation. J. D. Thompson showed Nelson Fisher, also Mrs. Patten. John Hartje showed his Moonlight in fine shape. Baur & Smith showed a fine vase of their new Indianapolis, which attracted much attention by its fine color. They also showed a vase of each of two other seedlings, Beatrice, a light pink, and Indiana Market, a pure white, both good. The winners in the competitive classes were as follows:

The B. K. & B. Floral Co. was first for fifty crimson and fifty red, second for light pink. E. T. Grave was first for dark pink. Stuart & Haugh were first for yellow. J. D. Thompson was first for variegated, red, light pink and vase of 100, also second for 100 and for white and dark pink. W. J. & M. S. Vesey had the best and largest collection (W.

K. Partridge, second), and were second on variegated.

On new pink Swan Peterson was first with a fine light pink a full shade deeper than Enchantress; Thompson second with Nelson Fisher; Richmond Gem was the winning new red, Dorner & Sons Co. taking both premiums for new white with The Belle and Lady Bountiful. They were second for variegated, their seedling being beaten by Patten. Among standard sorts the best ones were McKinley, Wolcott, Fenn, Enchantress, Estelle, Prosperity, Lawson, Crane, Roosevelt, Avondale and Nelson. J. Hartje's Moonlight was certificated.

The roses were away ahead of any previously shown here, both in quantity and quality. Of course the new ones were the center of attraction and most of them looked very promising. Breitmeyer's new pink rose attracted much attention and the $100 offered for a name kept the crowds guessing along that line. This looks like a good thing and the judges unhesitatingly declared that it would fill a long felt want, as more variety is badly needed in roses. E. G. Hill showed several of his new varieties, one of them capturing the prize of $50, and will be named Rosalind Orr English. This is a beautiful deep but bright pink sort of great promise. Mr. Hill says it has a great pedigree. Among the others was a fine vase of his yellow seedling. A fine pink one captured the prize for best forcing variety. He also showed several of his Liberty seedlings and a vase of Mildred Grant, a beautiful, delicately tinted variety of white and pink color. E. T. Grave showed a bloom of a pink sport from Liberty.

Heller Bros. put up a large exhibit of Beauties of various lengths and they made a grand show. They were arranged on several tables so that the people could walk between them, and there was always a crowd around them. There must have been nearly 1,000 blooms in it, all told. W. K. Partridge's roses were as fine as any the writer has ever seen. The blooms were large and well colored and the foliage as clean as could be. He won four firsts out of five entries. The new rose Ideal shown by the E. G. Hill Co. is a beauty. The prizes went as follows:

On 100 Beauties, Benthley & Co., first; Heller Bros., second; Reinberg & Welland, third. Brides, Benthley & Co., first; Reinberg & Welland, second. Maids, Benthley & Co., first; Reinberg & Welland, second; W. K. Partridge, third. Ivory, W. K. Partridge, first; E. G. Hill Co., second. Liberty, W. K. Partridge, first; E. T. Grave, second. Kaiserin, W. K. Partridge, first; W. W. Coles, second. Golden Gate, W. K. Partridge, first; Benthley, second. Any other variety, E. G. Hill Co., first; E. T. Grave, second.

The Breitmeyer rose was certificated. Two fine tables of mixed varieties were staged by

One hundred blooms arranged for effect, S. A. Anderson, first; Wm. Scott, second; W. F. Kasting, third.

Dinner table, W. J. Palmer & Son, first, with a most finished effort, including several hundred dollars worth of nappery, with Bonnaillon mums; Wm. Scott, second, with Maud Dean mums; S. A. Anderson, third. C. D. Zimmerman set a fine table in white. Jimmy Braik said a less variety of glasses and more of them filled would suit his judgment better.

One hundred Beauty roses, S. A. Anderson, first; W. F. Kasting, second; South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind., third.

One hundred white roses, C. Guenther, first, with Kaiserin; S. A. Anderson, second, with Bride; W. F. Kasting, third, with Kaiserin.

One hundred pink, W. F. Kasting, first, with Killarny; South Park Floral Co., second, with Maid; S. A. Anderson, third, with Golden Gate.

On Thursday evening the State Florists' Society entertained the visiting florists at a banquet given at the German House. About eighty gentlemen and one lady sat down and partook of the entertainment, and that it was heartily enjoyed could be seen on all sides. Vice-President E. A. Nelson introduced E. G. Hill as toastmaster and he filled the position as only he can. The other speakers were Mrs. Vesey, J. D. Carmody, W. N. Rudd, E. Wienhoeber, Theo. Bock, Phil Hauswirth and "Baby" Foley, all of whom were full of praise for the show and its management. Messrs. Rudd and Hauswirth spoke of the effect the failure to have a show is having on the 'mum market in Chicago, while Mr. Bock kept the assembly laughing by telling how the judges decide a close race when there is really no perceptible difference between two lots of blooms. Mr. Buettner contracted a severe cold on Wednesday night and was obliged to remain at the hotel, which every one regretted very much indeed. After the feast there was bowling, etc., which was kept up until a late hour.

The following visitors attended the show and many of them the banquet:

Mrs. Chas. Rieinan, Vincennes, Ind.; Mr. Norton, S. Orange, N. J.; W. N. Rudd, P. J. Foley, E. Wienhoeber, E. Buettner, P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago; E. G. Hill, Miss S. A. Hill, E. The second day brought the carnations, roses and violets. All these were well represented. The feature of the rose exhibit was the vase of twenty-five special blooms of Liberty from Edward Towill, of Roslyn. They were exceedingly well done. Beauty and Edgely were shown in good form, also a great number of smaller roses. This exhibit was very popular. It was often difficult to get near the flowers.

The carnations were varied and full of interest. Peter Fisher had a fine new scarlet, showing both plant and blooms as required by the rules. The increase in the number of fancy sorts shown was marked. This exhibit was creditable for the season.

Very few violets were shown, but those present were fine.

T. H. Norton had some splendid white. Mrs. Sarah J. Smith added to her reputation as a grower of choice singles. A few additions were made to the show the remaining days.

John Brietmeyer's Sons of Detroit, sent a bunch of their new pink rose which was placed in a vase at the foot of the main stairway, where every one might see it. On the vase was a card offering $100 in gold for a name. It is said 19,999 names were sent in, here is the twenty thousandth:

The beautiful name of Grace.

There was an effective mantel decoration arranged with chrysanthemums and foliage by Joseph Kift & Son.

A dinner table was set for twelve with depressed center, edged with asparagus and filled with a variety of orchids. The corsage bunches and boutonnieres were of violets. This was the work of the William Graham Co. and was much admired.

There was an effective mantel decoration arranged with chrysanthemums and foliage by Joseph Kirt & Son.

A dinner table was set for twelve with depressed center, edged with asparagus and filled with a variety of orchids. The corsage bunches and boutonnieres were of violets. This was the work of the William Graham Co. and was much admired.

In an alcove on the first floor was a large circular bed of tulips in full bloom.

Several varieties being set out in a well executed design, the whole bed encircled by a colored light, produced a most pleasing effect. This was the object lesson of the Henry F. Michell Co., and the work of Phillip Freud.

A very fine plant of heliotrope, said to be new, with immense masses of bloom, was shown by Arthur Mallon, Jr., manager for Lewis Burk.

There was a pretty vase of the yellow Cosmos Klondike, said to bloom only under glass in this latitude.

There was a splendid collection of vegetables, chiefly from the private gardeners, most creditable. The seedmen had interesting exhibits of bulbs and implements of all kinds. The nurserymen had some fine evergreens, and a large collection of hardy chrysanthemum blooms which proved very interesting.

The orchid exhibit referred to last week won a silver medal. It was very choice and beautifully staged. The exhibitors were Lager & Hurrell.

The weather continued favorable throughout the entire week, large crowds attending daily, larger I am informed than ever before. It is impossible for me to give a detailed account of one-half the meritorious exhibits. One of the judges, A. B. Cartledge, described the exhibition as the finest he had ever seen. Before closing a word of praise is due the masterly way in which Secretary Rust rose to the occasion. Everything was done promptly and quietly, exhibitors and visitors alike receiving full consideration. PHIL.

if such a rule as the one just mentioned should only be used in case a person wished to stage a collection of plants or something which would take up a lot of room, and not on the other hand turn a man down who has a bunch of violets or a few vases of carnations to exhibit. It does more harm to have such a rule than it does good, especially when there isn't any one man who has the power to make an exception to the rule or in other words has the privilege of using his own judgment in the case. FORT SMITH, ARK.

The Fort Smith chrysanthemum show was a most pronounced success, for which many thanks are due to the trade exhibitors from a distance. California was represented by C. E. Needham, who sent the California pepper tree, the red berries and fern-like foliage of which are very enduring. Wild smilax was supplied by Caldwell the Woodsman. Over 1,500 chrysanthemum blooms were represented, by growers many of whom have a national reputation. Most of the stock arrived in fine shape and the judges had a difficult task.

For twenty-five blooms, not less than five of a kind, N. Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., were first. Honorable mention was made of the exhibits of H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.; J. H. Morton, Clarksville, Tenn., and Vaughan's Greenhouses.

J. H. Morton was first on white variety, with Mrs. H. Robinson. H. W. Buckbee received honorable mention.

The Muskogee Carnation Co. was first on yellow, with Appleton, honorable mention being made of the exhibits of H. W. Buckbee, J. H. Morton and the Memphis Floral Co.

The best novelties were those of H. W. Buckbee but honorable mention was given J. H. Morton, who also had the best single-stemmed plants. Samuel Murray, Kansas City, showed the best bush plants, J. H. Morton second. For best pink the first premium went to E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.

On roses, the premium for Beauties was divided between J. H. Morton and the Idlewild Greenhouses of Memphis, the latter being first on Kaiserin.

The first prize for a novelty in carnations was given to J. H. Morton and first in the general class to the Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.

Among exhibitors not competing were C. Young & Sons Co., St. Louis; J. W. Vestal & Son, Little Rock; Wm. Weaver, So. McAllister, I. T.; A. A. Pantet & Co., Fort Smith; Miss Lila Rollston, Fayetteville, and many others. Reasoner Bros., Oneco, Fla.; P. J. Berckmans Co., Augusta, Ga., and I. H. Krone made fine displays of plants. The show will be an annual affair.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

The Dutchess County Horticultural Society held its annual show, opening November 11, with a very fine display. The arrangement was particularly noteworthy. W. G. Saltford was the principal exhibitor. Others were C. F. Dieterich, Winthrop Sargent, F. R. Newbold, Archibald Rogers, Ogden Mills, W. D. Sloane, D.

S. Lamont, W. J. Seeley, A. E. Jenkins, L. P. Morton, J. D. Wing, C. J. Reynolds, G. H. Howarth, Lyon & Strickland, Stanton Rockefeller, W. B. Willig, G. N. Miller and others.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.

The first annual exhibition of the Canandaigua Florists' and Gardeners' Society was held November 5 and 6. As a show of blooms I might say it was a decided success, and a better arrangement of the plants and cut blooms is seldom seen, which was largely due to the directions of Robert E. Ballantyne, gardener to Mrs. F. F. Thompson. Mr. Ballantyne staged a group of foliage plants and pot chrysanthemums covering a space of at least 250 feet that I have never seen equaled. The officiating judge was Mr. Ballantyne, Sr., of New York city, and his decisions met with the approval of all.

Alex. Ogilvie was the only exhibitor in the class for a group of chrysanthemums in pots occupying a space of fifty square feet. Joseph Jones was first for a group of palms and foliage plants. R. H. McKerr staged a very fine lot of palms and ferns not for competition.

Joseph Jones was first for best specimen palm, Alex Ogilvie second. Alex Ogilvie was first for adiantum, for three plants suitable for table decorations, also for three best ferns, Duncan Rhind second. Mr. Rhind was first for twelve plants grown to single stem, Alex Ogilvie second. For twenty-four blooms, four varieties, J. B. Keller Sons, Rochester, were first. Twenty blooms, distinct varieties, Duncan Rhind first, Alex Ogilvie second. Six blooms white, Duncan Rhind first, J. B. Keller Sons second. Six yellow, Rhind first, Ogilvie second. Six pink, Joseph Jones first, Ogilvie second. Six crimson, Ogilvie first, Jones second. Most effective vase of twenty-five blooms, Ogilvie first, R. H. McKerr second. A special prize of $10 was given for the best six American Beauty roses, which brought out keen competition, R. H. McKerr winning. Twelve Bridesmaids, McKerr first, Keller Sons second, Twelve Brides, McKerr first, Keller Sons second. Twelve best roses in the show, R. H. McKerr first. Thirty-six carnations, six varieties, McKerr first. Eighteen blooms, three varieties, McKerr first, Rhind second. Twelve white, McKerr first, Jones second. Twelve scarlet, McKerr first, Ogilvie second. Twelve cerise, McKerr first, Jones second. Twelve pink, McKerr first, Jones second. Twelve crimson, McKerr first, Rhind second. Best seedling, Rhind second. Fifty violets, double, Jones first, McKerr second. Floral design, Rhind first, McKerr second. Centerpiece Rhind first, McKerr second. Hand bouquet, McKerr first, Rhind second.

A finer collection of fruit and vegetables was never seen in Canandaigua.

I forgot to mention that Chas. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., sent some of his novelties in chrysanthemums, such varieties as William Duckham, F. A. Cobbold, Leila Filkins and others, which were a revelation to all those who saw them.

R. H. M.

ST. PAUL.

The second annual chrysanthemum exhibition by the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Northwestern Manufacturers' Association was held in Mozart hall, St. Paul, November 10 to 13. The quality of the exhibits surpassed those of a year ago but the show as a whole was not as pretty, the chief reason for this being the lack of room to properly display the entries. The programme was planned to judge very detrimental to the judging. However, the show as a whole was successful, the greatest regret being the lack of room.

E. F. Lemke had a good general display, making entries in nearly all classes. His 'mum design was an eagle with outstretched wings poised upon a globe, all made of white blooms. A star of carnations received great praise. His prize winning Timothy Eatons were a revelation to many, measuring eight inches or more in diameter. In violets he easily won first honors.

Vogt Bros. had a creditable exhibit. They won several firsts and a number of seconds. Their display was not as large as the others, but was generally admired as much.

L. L. May & Co. had the largest collection in the hall, making entries in nearly all classes. In 'mum plants they easily lead all others, winning the majority of firsts in these classes. Their anemone-flowered varieties were particularly admired and will most likely be more largely grown another season. They showed a star of white 'mums about five feet across, with an eagle with outstretched wings depicted on the same in yellow 'mums. A large basket of Bridesmaid roses was nicely arranged. They showed a large number of carnations, many more than the entries called for.

Holm & Olson won more first prizes than any one. Their display was large and handsome, their prize winning standard 'mums from Chicago being especially admired. These were fully four feet high by eight or ten in circumference, each plant bearing as many as 200 flowers. The vase of Mme. Chatenay roses was especially good. In design they made a large, waving American flag, on the field of which an eagle stood. The stripes were made of white and red carnations while the stars were in white 'mums on a field of blue ageratum. Another design, their prize winner, was a cornucopia of first prize and the admiration of all who saw it. A large panel picture of a vase of 'mums occupied a prominent position in the exhibit. The frame was in yellow, the background white, from which stood out in bold relief a vase of delicate pink filled with dark red, the whole contrasting very beautifully. Another tasty design was a basket of Chatenay roses and valley standing on a spread or covering of roses, making a very unique combination.

The show was not well advertised and only fairly well patronized. It was made a society event, with tea and punch rooms in connection.

On Friday night the florists donated their exhibition blooms to the management, and they were sold at auction, realizing about $40. Some of the flowers were in good shape, but sold at a ridiculous price, way below value. Others were very poor, but brought good prices.

CHRYSANTHEMUM DISEASES.

The following are the most important portions of the address of Prof. Geo. E. Stone, of the Hatch Experiment Station, before the Chrysanthemum Society of America at the New York meeting November 11:

The diseases to which chrysanthemums are subject are not especially numerous and, on the whole, the crop must be considered a tolerably clean one to grow. Among those diseases which are more or less common may be mentioned the following:

Powdery Mildew.

Mildew frequently shows itself to a slight extent on the lower and more mature leaves of the chrysanthemum. It is of little consequence, however, to the careful grower. The mildew is similar in appearance to that found on roses and can, no doubt, if necessary, be checked by the same means, namely, the application of sulphur.

Rust.

Most growers are familiar with the chrysanthemum rust, although I have no doubt some of you have had no personal experience with it. The rust occurs as small blisters, usually on the underside of the leaves. These blisters eventually break open, thus exposing a brownish, powdery mass. This powdery substance constitutes uredospores, which are the only spores known to be produced by this fungus in this country.

The first appearance of the chrysanthemum rust in America, so far as known, occurred in Massachusetts during the fall of 1896, on which occasion it was discovered doing considerable damage to the plants of George H. Hastings, of Fitchburg. This outbreak appears to have been the only one recognized that year. The next year, however, the rust became much more widely distributed and since that time it has spread over a considerable portion of the United States, and some growers have experienced quite a little difficulty from it. It appears to have occurred in England in 1895, and on the continent two years later, where it became rather common. The first two or three years of the outbreak, in this country, proved the worst, and at present little is heard from the rust in the east, especially from our largest and most efficient growers. Its disappearance appears to be due to two causes; namely, the discovery and application of cultural methods which render rust infection less chrysanthemum plants and blooms the first day, roses the second day, carnations and violets the third, and designs and baskets the fourth. It was also intended to display the cut flowers and designs in a separate room from the plants. But all these plans were changed at almost the last minute, and all exhibits were placed in one room and all judging done the same day. This prevented one exhibitor from competing at all and was

'mums on a scroll of the same flowers. A large specimen plant of Pandanus Sanderi took first prize in its class. Piersoni fern easily captured first place.

Aug. S. Swanson made one of the handsomest exhibits in the hall, the leading features of which were his palms and ferns and his designs, all of which captured prizes. A basket of orchids, consisting of dendrobiums, vandaeas, phalaenopsis, cypripedium and cattleyas captured common, and the limitation of the fungus to a single stage (uredo) of existence. Prof. Arthur, of the Lafayette Experiment Station, has pointed out that the latter feature is at least somewhat responsible for its decline. Upon this point Prof. Arthur writes as follows:

"Another circumstance much in the cultivator's favor is the propagation of the disease without the formation of the customary teleuto spores, or third stage. Not only does this render the disease far less persistent, but without doubt indicates that it is less vigorous in its attacks. In general, when a rust is confined to the uredo forms for a number of generations, its vitality is much reduced, and also its power of injuring the crop. So long as the teleuto spores do not make an appearance in this country, the careful cultivator may feel assured that a moderate amount of timely effort will enable him to rid his establishment of the rust."

That cultural methods have also had a great deal to do with the disappearance of the rust is evident from the fact that our most skillful growers of chrysanthemums have never had it but one or two years, and some not at all, while less skillful, and less painstaking growers have been more or less subject to it every year. From the first, we have never apprehended any very serious trouble from the rust because we believed that some cultural method could be devised that would render it less troublesome.

About four years after the rust had made its appearance in our state, we sent out a number of circulars to chrysanthemum growers requesting information upon various points. The answers given to this circular showed that the rust was more widely distributed and most destructive the second year following its arrival, and from that time it decreased in vigor and abundance. One-third of the growers stated that they never had the rust on their plants, and were familiar with it only as they had seen it on other stock, while others had only experienced a slight infection one year. One florist who cultivates 40,000 plants, states that he has not had the rust since 1898, and at that time he had it only to a very slight extent. The amount of infection which has been prevalent varied from one per cent to fifty per cent, the latter figure being exceptionally high, for very few have had even twenty-five per cent as a maximum amount of infection.

The financial damage is by no means proportional to the amount of infection, and in most instances it amounts to nothing.

Most gardeners agree that weak stock is the most susceptible to rust; and if weak, infected plants are allowed to remain in close proximity to strong, healthy ones, the latter will subsequently become infected. The method of preventing rust consists in handpicking the affected leaves, selecting clean, strong stock, discarding susceptible varieties, and inside culture. If these suggestions are carried out the rust can be practically eliminated.

In regard to inside culture during the summer, we find that many excellent growers lay much stress on this practice, and from our observations we consider it very essential in order to obtain plants free from rust. The reason that inside culture results in less infection is due to the avoidance of mists and dews on the foliage, hence furnishing less favorable opportunity for rust spores to germinate and cause infection. Care should also be taken to keep all unnecessary water off the foliage in cultivation in the greenhouse.

Most growers agree that the chrysanthemum rust is of little consequence, and others look upon it as a thing of the past. There are a few, however, who have not succeeded in subduing it, and who still think it a serious disease. Some have resorted to spraying, with results that amount to little more than partial suppression. It appears from our own observations, as well as from those obtained from the most successful growers of this plant, that the proper remedy lies in the judicious selection of healthy, rust-free stock, and inside cultivation. Give the plants plenty of air and keep the soil in good physical condition. If, however, any of the leaves become infected, they should be removed and burned immediately; and if a plant is badly affected, it should be destroyed. In whatever manner the plants are cultivated, whether indoors or out, endeavor to keep the dew and moisture off the foliage as much as possible.

Stem-Rot.

More or less trouble from stem-rot has been experienced by chrysanthemum growers in the last few years, and it is considered by some as a serious trouble. It is characterized by a slow fading and withering of the leaves, beginning toward the bottom and gradually working up the stem. The flower develops poorly or not at all, and the whole plant finally dies prematurely. The cause of the disease is a fungus which grows in the stem and fills up the large ducts or vessels through which the water must pass in coming up from the roots. The fungus giving rise to this trouble is a species of fusarium, similar forms of which cause like diseases in other species, and there can be but little doubt that the plant is first attacked from the soil, whence the fungus spreads into the stem and on up through it to a considerable height. As the pores become more and more clogged with the fungous threads, the water supply to the leaves is diminished, and consequently they gradually wither away and die. It is noticeable that this disease appears most commonly as a result of conditions favoring damping off. Where young plants are crowded in flats or beds, those in the center are generally the ones to show the trouble. This is likewise true with the other diseases of this class, and such conditions should be avoided. The soil is to be looked upon as the chief source of infection in all such troubles. There is little danger of contagion in well-rooted plants by spores in the air, as with rusts, mildew and similar diseases. Healthy propagating stock, fresh soil, avoidance of over-crowding to prevent damping off, and hygienic conditions, are the most effectual means of controlling this trouble.

Other fungous diseases of chrysanthemums have been noted, particularly the anthracnose and two-leaf spots, but we have had no experience with them. They are foliage diseases and in some instances they have been reported as threatening. Where too close planting occurs, causing a deficiency in light and air, there is not infrequently a loss of foliage, especially of the lower leaves, and fungi occasionally found on such leaves appear to be mostly of secondary importance.

In conclusion, we will state that the combating of diseases characteristic of greenhouse crops should be as a rule, along cultural lines rather than other methods of treatment, and we have faith enough in the skill and knowledge of our American florists to believe that they will, by this means, be able to master in time all difficulties which may occur.

IMPRESSIONS OF INDIANAPOLIS.

The chrysanthemum show held during the past week at Tomilson hall, Indianapolis, took us all by surprise and many were the complimentary remarks of the numerous visitors. I shall not attempt, however, to dwell upon the various features of the show, nor do I wish to speak about the individual exhibitors and their most meritorious exhibits, leaving that part to your able correspondent. To me the general impression of the show seems worthy of note. And right here I can scarcely refrain from paying my compliments to the Bertermanns, both father and son, whose untiring efforts, able management and executive ability were responsible for the marvelous success achieved.

What has impressed us all is the fact of the process of the management (if I may thus put it) being in no wise thrust upon the public. We well know that an affair of this sort required constant care and vigilance; we realized that unless the show was managed ably, "first, last and all the time," no such results as were achieved here, were possible, and yet, to quote Mr. Rudd's apt remark, "the symptoms of management were invisible." Everything seemed to work with clock-like regularity, such things as oversight and confusion being conspicuous by their absence.

The decoration of the hall and the brilliant varicolored electric illuminations proved a revelation to many. Here the artistic propensities of Ed. Bertermann seemed to have had full sway and to his credit be it said that nothing short of the finest decoration for an affair of this sort was attempted. Nor can I overlook the fact of the good work done by the Indiana florists in general, of both Indianapolis and other towns. It seemed to me that enthusiasm and a determination to contribute to the success of the show for its own sake, rather than for pecuniary interests, actuated them in their work.

And what a magnificent display of chrysanthemums, roses and carnations! Verily, Madam Flora is neither dormant nor stagnant, but is progressing in a manner that is simply wonderful. What had seemed the acme of perfection a year or two ago must yield to the aspirants of this season and what is perfect today will in all likelihood be relegated to a back seat tomorrow. Thus the world moveth along and the florists, bent on success, do likewise.

The splendid rose seedlings shown there not only look promising, but some of them have more than fulfilled their promise. The Breitmeyer rose, which we hope will soon be given a name well worthy of it, is decidedly a great acquisition. The E. G. Hill Co. has several surprises in store, some of which seem destined to make their mark.

In chrysanthemums there were magnificent specimens, which will soon be heard from.

And how royally we were entertained at the banquet. Taken all in all, the Indianapolis chrysanthemum show proved an all around success, being one of the finest ever given in any city. S. S. S.

colder weather, when I hope to say something about its blooming and keeping qualities, size, form, etc., properties which at the present time cannot be discussed with justice to what promises to be an advance in its color.

Richmond Gem.

I have also six plants of Richmond Gem (the B. K. and B. Floral Co.'s new scarlet). Since benching the plants have made rapid growth and bloomed early. Everyone is taken with the color, which is of the richest shade imaginable. The size of bloom will not place it in the exhibition class, but thus far flowers have averaged two and one-half inches. Its earliness will commend it to those who have been obliged to discard Crane.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

CAUSE OF SHORT STEMS.

Please tell me what to do to make my carnation stems long. The plants have lots of buds, but the stems are very short. I syringe about twice a month, when the weather is bright, and I don't let them get very dry before watering. I try to give all the air I can. J. J.

Your question sounds like a very simple one, but you do not give enough data to work out a very satisfactory answer, I fear. There are many reasons why your carnations might make a lot of short stems at this time, and possibly I may mention in this letter the one that really was the cause in your case. I do not know what varieties you are growing; perhaps you are growing such varieties as Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Bradt and Glacier, and it would only be natural for the stems to be rather short as yet. How early did you plant them in the houses? If you did not plant until as late as September you cannot reasonably expect very long stems from most varieties. Did your plants take hold when you planted them? If they suffered very much they would not make as long stems on the first crop of blooms as they would in case they suffered but little. Perhaps your soil is not rich enough to produce a strong, luxuriant growth, and of course that would tell on your stems, too.

To get long stems as well as fine blooms at this time of the year it is essential that you plant early, in good soil and see that your plants do not suffer much from the transplanting. The first of September should see your planting all done. Of course varieties differ in the length of stem they produce, and you will also find that a very large, bushy plant will usually throw shorter stems the first crop than a medium sized plant will. The reason is obvious. The large number of shoots drawing upon a crippled root system fail to get enough nourishment for so many shoots to grow to their full size, and again the larger plants usually suffer more from transplanting and take longer to fully recover, while all this time the shoots are making a feeble effort to grow. If you have ever tried the indoor culture you will know that the plants that were grown inside all summer will make longer stems than those from the field up to about January 1. In my notes earlier in the season you will find my reason for advocating early planting, and I will not enlarge upon the advantages of it now, although I have an idea that that is where you made your mistake.

CARNATION NOTES—EAST.

General Behavior.

Notwithstanding unsuitable weather conditions of the past summer which in many instances caused more or less loss of plants to the grower, the supply of bloom is unusually large for this time of year. The warm weather of this fall has worked wonders among plants which at housing time were considered doubtful, and if you have practiced judicious topping and given general good treatment, Thanksgiving will see the carnation in better demand and giving its accustomed returns.

From the fact that trouble through stem-rot in the field was so widespread, it would seem that indications point to weather conditions as contributing largely to the development of this disease, rather than system of planting and cultivating, that is whether planted moderately close or widely apart on a level or on ridges and cultivated either by hand or horse.

I have always advocated and practiced planting moderately close (six to eight inches in the row and rows twelve to eighteen inches apart) cultivating with wheel and hand hoes. Close investigation and repeated inquiries in this section during the past two months fail to show stem-rot to have been any more prevalent with growers planting closely than in rows far apart, either before or since housing, and in consequence I am more strongly convinced that moderately close planting with its necessary attendant cultivation is preferable on account of advantages gained over cultivation by horses in widely separated rows. A great deal of blame is laid to the cutting bench when as a matter of fact the cutting before it is rooted may be at fault.

It is an easy matter to correct a faulty bench or refrain from using one designed for other plants, but a cutting from an unhealthy plant is quite sure to inherit the same disease and very likely to contaminate the sand and other cuttings around it; while on the cutting bench, did it ever occur to you that possibly the low price at which rooted cuttings of some varieties are offered had something to do with the cause of disease? There can certainly be no care exercised in selection, and from what I have seen, of some shipments of cuttings, I am led to the following definition which may shed some light on the subject of disease and perchance point out the danger in buying too cheaply.

Whosoever shall indiscriminately remove in any manner from any part of a plant, healthy or otherwise, a certain portion of said plant the length or condition of said portion making no material difference and when removed the same being inserted in sand and treated in such a manner that in the shortest possible space of time a root or roots shall begin to form, then shall the result be known as a rooted cutting.

Indianapolis.

Last spring Messrs. Baur & Smith sent me a few plants of their new seedling, Indianapolis, with the request that I give them a fair trial, and report their behavior. Weather conditions compelled us to house when comparatively small, but we planted them in heavy soil and judging from their growth, they seem to like our treatment. It is early to judge the merits of any variety, but even at this date, I can say the stem and calyx are the acme of perfection. The color is good and will probably improve with

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

As the season for propagating approaches every preparation should be made so that nothing may be wanting to ensure complete success. The piping in the propagating house should be looked over, tested and any defects made good. The benches should be overhauled and put into good repair, so that no accident may occur after the cuttings are in. Ventilators should be readjusted and put into good working order and a liberal supply of sand or other propagating medium secured. Having all these requisites, materially facilitates the real work of propagating. The stock should now be looked over and all the mixtures prominently tagged so that the mixture may not be perpetuated.

In houses containing Brides or Bridesmaids, if the varieties chance to get mixed, it is impossible to distinguish them unless they are in bloom, they so closely resemble each other in habit and foliage, so that if we want them true to name we must label them when they are in bloom. All young stock should be true to name so that we may know exactly what we are planting and if we have surplus stock for sale how much more satisfactory to both buyer and seller if this is the case.

Such varieties as are wanted for summer blooming should be propagated now. There is usually an abundance of good propagating wood at this season, which roots easily, and if handled properly will make nice thrifty plants for benching in February, which will give them ample time to get into flowering condition by Memorial day.

The soil for this planting should now be under cover so that it may be in good condition at that time and so give the young stock a fair chance to start well. If the soil is left outside it has every chance to be too wet at that season and if in that condition the young stock will get a check from which it takes them a long time to recover, checking their vigor and curtailing the growing season.

Kaiserin, Golden Gate, Ivory, Liberty and Chatenay are among the best varieties for this purpose, Ivory being really the finest of all the summer blooming whites, keeping up size and purity of color even during the hottest spells.

RIBES.

COVENT GARDEN MARKET.

It is usual to hear growers complain of dull trade, but we think that during the past few weeks the "grumble" has been quite justified, says the Gardeners' Chronicle, London. At closing time a few mornings ago many of the stands were still filled with pot plants, and cut flowers were as plentiful. Among pot plants chrysanthemums were those most in demand. It is remarkable that really good stuff should be confined to so few stands. One grower, who does Soleil d'Octobre well, was making from 2s 6d to 3s 6d each for his best plants; 12s to 18s per dozen for useful plants appeared to be the average prices; of course there was a good deal of ordinary stuff sold at considerably less.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine on several stands, some of the finest plants I have ever seen, were making 18s per dozen; but it is yet too early for this to go freely; 8s to 10s per dozen was asked for good plants in 48's, but there were a good many remaining unsold. Of heaths, gracilis is the only variety yet in in quantity. Cyclamen and primulas are coming in, but they do not appear to be much in demand. The same may be said of bouvardias and marguerites. There will be little improvement in the plant trade until frost has cleared off outdoor flowers.

In cut flowers chrysanthemums are the most conspicuous, and there has been a fair trade for these; the blooms of middle size command the greatest amount of attention. The early varieties that were disbudded made good prices. One grower, Mr. Shawyer, who has been sending about 300 blooms to market daily, tells me that they have made from 1s to 2s 6d per dozen blooms. I may mention that these were chiefly new varieties of his own raising. Elaine is still a favorite with the growers for market, and though generally coming in later, some good blooms have already been on sale. Goacher's Crimson seems likely to take the first place in its class; and Horace Martin is one of the best of the yellows.

A WESTERN GARDENER'S NOTES.

II.

Continuing my travels as recounted in my recent notes, I visited Fairmount park, Philadelphia, where the grounds are extensive and the Horticultural hall immense. They have many grand old plants, which, however, show a lack of care. Mr. Smith, the foreman, has but eight men for outside and inside work, while, in my opinion, he should have that many for the inside alone.

P. A. B. Widener, of Ogontz, has a large range of glass and grows everything for home use. One house is devoted to orchids and several to chrysanthemums. Two small Italian gardens near his residence are filled with palms, bay trees, etc.

The commercial establishment of H. A. Dreer, Riverton, N. J., is devoted for the most part to palms, stove plants and azaleas. The palms vary in size from those in 2-inch pots to those requiring tubs. They also have a fine assortment of water lilies, worthy a visit from anyone who is interested in their growth. Mr. Eisele, the manager, extended me every possible courtesy.

The beds of fine crotons and fancy-leaved caladiums at Girard College, which I had the privilege of seeing under the guidance of Superintendent Huster, proved very interesting.

At South Orange, N. J., I found Mr. Manda and Mr. Macrorie very busy housing their plants in the newly completed buildings. After dining with Mr. Manda we walked through his beautiful grounds. He carries a fine line of nursery stock and is doing much landscape work. In all his houses he suspends orchids from the roof, between the other plants. He is certainly a champion in growing Dendrobium Wardianum. Although it was raining heavily, Mr. Manda drove with me to the home of H. Graves, whose gardener, Mr. Thomas, makes a specialty of orchids. Several houses of these beautiful flowers bear evidence of scientific care.

Messrs. Lager & Hurrell received me very kindly at their place in Summit, N. J., and showed me through what seems to be a model orchid growing establishment. Their plants are all healthy and are made up of cattleyas and every other leading variety. Some very scarce varieties are also to be found there.

At Madison, N. J., I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Herrington, superintendent of the Twombly place, and of taking dinner with him. He grows grapes, chrysanthemums and orchids for sale, and has some four or five houses in cattleyas. The latter are in baskets attached to the roof. In the middle of each house is a rail running from end to end; from this rail and on wheels is a sort of step-ladder which the men can move from place to place while watering the plants. One large house is devoted to cypripediums and another to chrysanthemums. Mr. Herrington has a new yellow carnation, not yet named, which will be a standard. There are two houses for Adiantum Farleyense; his specimen azaleas are from six to eight feet in diameter, with stems as thick as one's arm. Rare conifers, Cedrus japonica, and the finest bay trees in the world are seen here. The landscape at the home of Mr. Twombly is wonderful, the house is exceptionally fine and the view over the valley charming.

Mr. Duckham showed me the premises of D. Willis James, for whom he is gardener. They have orchids in all varieties, stove plants, new crotons and grapes in fine condition, and Mr. Duckham has a beautiful pink chrysanthemum which will come out under his name.

Julius Roehrs, of Rutherford, N. J., has twenty-six houses in orchids. I found him very busy because of the floods that had filled his cellars. Mr. Roehrs has been doing some experimenting with Belgian leaf mold. He told me that with Dendrobium Phalaenopsis in fern roots he had no success, but that those now in leaf mold are exceptionally fine. I can see no advantage in the use of leaf mold with cattleyas. While here I saw two houses of Ardisia crenulata that have reached a degree of perfection not to be surpassed here or abroad.

Mr. Schlegel, Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, has a collection of cattleyas which his gardener claims to be the largest in the country. His several houses of plants are in splendid condition. One house is filled with all kinds of phalaenopsis. All of his flowers are for market. The estate of Hicks Arnold, 84 Central Park, New York, has the finest lot of cypripediums that I have ever seen.

The Bronx Botanical Garden has a fine range of glass, and the plants are fair. A good start has been given them, and with continual care this should become one of the finest botanical gardens in the country. They have here a very fine museum with microscopes for the use of students.

Lenox, Mass., presents the finest landscape planting and scenery with hill surroundings that I saw while away. I visited several places, among them that of Mrs. Westinghouse, Mr. Norman, gardener. She has two houses of cypripediums. Her place is like Versailles, with fountains, etc., and an attractive drive, as hard as rock, through an avenue of pine trees. At Mr. Cook's place, Mr. Thompson, gardener, they have some choice orchids and cut flowers, and grow fine peaches under glass. The piazza of the mansion is beautifully decorated with palms and flowering plants, for which an immense reserve supply is always under cultivation. With two symmetrical Italian gardens, about 100 bay trees in all shapes, and carpet beds here and there, the place must present a beautiful scene in season. The large number of greenhouses belonging to J. Sloan were shown me by Mr. Loveless, the gardener. One of these houses is devoted to orchids. They grow some very fine peaches under glass. I was also shown very courteously through the thirty houses belonging to W. D. Sloan. Mr. Herman, the gardener, told me that they grow everything that can be grown.

I visited Utica, New York, in order to see the plant belonging to Wm. Matthews, who has plants of all the leading orchids, representing what was probably once a very large collection. He grows carnations to perfection, and does some rose growing also.

CHAS. GEBHARDT.

NEW YORK.

Meeting of the C. S. A.

Last week's meeting of the C. S. A. was held in an improvised room in the great hall, where over fifty members enjoyed the addresses of the president and experts, and enthusiastically demanded the re-election of Arthur Herrington, a fitting tribute to the unceasing energy he has displayed in behalf of the society throughout the year. All the other officers were re-elected, except the vice-president, this honor falling upon Elmer D. Smith, whose magnificent gift of the chrysanthemum records was unanimously accorded the hearty thanks of the members. The president's address was an interesting and practical effort, and was well received. Secretary Lemon's report included particulars as to the records showing among the 2,500 varieties of 'mums, 1,358 American varieties, 1,029 importations distributed in this country, thirty-three synonyms and eighty-two sports. These will be fully incorporated in the published records of the society's convention.

Prof. Geo. E. Stone, of Hatch Experiment Station, read his essay on "The Diseases of the Chrysanthemum," and was followed in the after discussion by Mr. O'Mara, Prof. Craig and others. F. W. Taylor's invitation to St. Louis next year was read and appreciated, but the general desire to hold the next meeting in the east was evident, and the executive committee, in whose hands the decision is placed, will doubtless agree upon either New York or Boston for 1904.

Mr. O'Mara's interesting criticisms of the 'mum exhibits and especially of the varieties Lord Salisbury and Mrs. Thirkell, were very interesting. The president's address was thoroughly discussed, Messrs. Rackham, Smith, Wood, Scott and O'Mara participating. The whole meeting was particularly harmonious. The prospects are bright for an increased interest, both in the convention and exhibition in 1904.

Notes of the Show.

The possibility of a show that will pay, and draw the crowds and encourage the expert plantmen has been fully demonstrated. Now that the ice has been broken there is no good reason why every recurring show should not see grander results than its predecessor.

The prize list gives details, but conveys no idea of the wonderful blooms shown. Never have such magnificent blooms been seen in this country, but at the head of the procession, it may safely be said, were Wm. Duckham, Dr. Englehardt and Percy Plumridge.

The flowers from W. Wells, of England were in very good condition, considering their long journey and served to show the enterprise of this gentleman, who also sent an exhibit to the 1902 show.

Leonard Barron handled the press department well. All the daily papers gave the show much space.

The dinner Wednesday evening was given by Mr. Herrington to the visitors. Among those present were Philip Breitmeyer and Geo. A. Rackham, Detroit; Fred Lemon, Richmond; E. D. Smith, Adrian; C. W. Johnson, Rockford; Judge Vesey, Fort Wayne; J. R. Fotheringham, Tarrytown; Elija Wood, Messrs. O'Mara, Totty, Troy, Lager, May, Weathered, Maynard, Manda and others most of whom had something to say complimentary to the show and the man to whose efforts the success was largely due.

Among the best carnations were Flamingo, White Lawson, Mrs. Patten, Albattross, Bride, Lawson and Enchantress.

Pierson's 100 Beauties, not for competition, were a grand lot and were at their best the closing day.

H. T. Clinkaberry's twenty-five varieties of cypripediums attracted much attention.

The seventeen large plants in H. W. Buckbee's exhibit were presented to the American Institute and his cut blooms sent to the hospitals.

M. A. Bowe has made the first prize offer for the show of 1904, a silver cup, value $50, for the best vase of 100 'mums, not less than ten varieties, to be won two years in succession to become the property of the exhibitor.

John Scott's new fern was complimented by everyone. It is certainly a splendid addition to the Boston family.

Roehr's great bank of palms and flowering plants was a most beautiful group, artistically arranged.

The enterprise of such men as Buckbee, Smith & Son and the E. G. Hill Co. cannot be too highly commended. Their exhibits were greatly appreciated by the management.

The Market.

Society will be in evidence all this week for the great annual horse show is on and orchids and violets will now have their day. May be this week will inaugurate the cold weather, the end of the long depression in the market, and the beginning of better times. Let us pray for so desirable a consummation.

The quality of the violets now reaching the market is unexcelled. Shipments to many of the leading wholesalers aggregate 20,000 daily, and are constantly increasing. The price for specials, in bunches of 100, all perfect flowers, is $1.50. Orchids are held at higher prices again, and valley also has touched $4 per 100 for the best. It looks as though the tide was coming in.

Various Notes.

The "Father of Greater New York," Andrew H. Green, was murdered by an insane negro on Saturday. His record includes the laying out of Central park, the planning of the great boulevard system, and of Morningside and Riverside parks, the latter for location one of the most beautiful in the world, and Niagara park at the Falls. Mr. Green was 83 years of age, and one of New York's grandest citizens. A great public monument will be erected to his memory.

Geo. Cotton, a member of the New York Florists' Club and one of the old-time gardeners, with a host of friends, is suffering from pleuro-pneumonia at the hospital in Yonkers, and is not expected to recover.

The exhibit of cacti, 350 varieties, at the flower show, by F. Wienberg, attracted much attention. Some of the specimens were "fearfully and wonderfully made."

Congratulations are due the popular Scotchman, John Burnie, on rounding his half century. He looks "vera weel" and like lasting another fifty years.

The ducal wedding of last week depended for its decorations at the house on Small & Sons, and at the church on Thorley. An error in my last attributed these to Hodgson.

The Ozone Nurseries, of Ozone Park, L. I., are elated over the rapid development of their business, and the exceptionally large fall trade. Their importations of forcing azaleas, rhododendrons, deutzia and roses are immense, and everything indicates a progressive, experienced and ambitious firm that has "come to stay."

Bradshaw & Hartman's holly for Thanksgiving will be ready for delivery next Monday. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is no improvement in the cut flower market. Quite a little business is going on, with entirely too much stuff in the market. Prices are weak and no fair offer is refused. A few rare and choice blossoms are in demand. S. S. Pennock filled some nice orders this week for white orchids, using Dendrobium formosum, and white violets. Eugene Bernheimer had some fancy mignonette and C. A. Dunn & Co. some wonderfully fine heliotrope that brought high prices. But these were the oases in the desert, so to speak, the fakirs having a glad-some time last Saturday, which was kept up during the early part of the week.

Indications point to a heavy cut of chrysanthemums on Thanksgiving. Still this is a big market. Let us hope that by the time these notes appear the glut will be over for the present.

Notes.

George Carpenter, of West Philadelphia, is sending in some fine Maud Dean chrysanthemums to William J. Baker.

Pennock Bros. are receiving the new rose, Ideal, daily from Jacob Becker.

Charles Fox has his windows handsomely decorated with yellow chrysanthemums in pots, backed by Cibotium Schiedeii, a most effective decorative fern.

The Flower Market is getting some splendid double violets from Johnson, of Hightstown, N. J.

R. H. Meehan, the well known rose grower, now of Anacostia, D. C., was among the many visitors last week.

John C. Gracey has his new store arranged with great taste. The opportunities for display have been improved in many ways. Bowls on stands, jardinières and colored glassware are freely used to set off his stock.

Edward Reid says he "was for the REVIEW when it was as much as a man's life was worth."

J. J. Habermehl's Sons have a nice batch of Stevia serrata in pots, dwarf and compact.

J. William Colflesh is looked upon as one of our most reliable growers. His re-election to the treasurership of the Florists' Club is a well deserved compliment.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving some natural cypress leaves, rather a rarity in these days of prepared stock.

Samuel S. Pennock received the REVIEW's Convention number when in London. He was much pleased with it, adding that it was the only trade paper that reached him while abroad.

A chrysanthemum show has been open for the past two weeks in the east wing of Horticultural Hall in Fairmont park. It has been greatly enjoyed by large numbers of visitors, who throng the building, especially on Sundays.

Fred J. Michell says he always turns to the REVIEW's classified plant index when in need of plants. PHIL.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The month of October and the first half of November stand at the head of the advanced class in misery among the flower growing pupils of the "Hub." The difficulty roots itself at the retail end of the business. All stores report slack trade as compared with late years, at this time, and give all sorts of theories therefor, from recent depreciations in values of stocks and bonds to hard times generally. But low prices have surely been assisted by an enormous output of glass-house goods, which have for the greater part of this time been altogether too plentiful for the most optimistic view of good retail business. Good pinks at times have been none too numerous and violets were quite scarce just after the first cold snap which paralyzed the outdoor crop before the indoor article got fairly rooted. Tables of prices are without much foundation. Reliable buyers give reliable growers what both may call fair prices at all times for all or part of their goods. Irregular buyers have been getting an advantage they must partly pay for later on and the street fakirs have been getting an awful inning at their own price. It is hoped this condition is practically over. Perhaps the warm weather has hurried out the chrysanthemums so that Thanksgiving day will wipe out the remainder as was formerly the case instead of letting some remain away along till after Christmas, as is getting to be the habit. The rose men hope so, but deep thinkers on the subject predict a market full of good material this winter, a rather slim demand with consequent low prices, hard collections and tough financial propositions. May confusion be their lot.

Notes.

A few events are happening. Theo. Lieburan, so long with Rosenthal, has bought out the interests of Hambro in the firm of Hambro & Gomperts, doing such a trim little traffic in the little niche in the shade of Galvin's big store. Wax Bros. add some elegant fixtures to their store, put on rather the most elegant delivery team in the city and have a runaway with their new horse in a carry-all which lames up the back of Martin's head severely and gives all hands a good physical and mental jolt. They are not easily "jarred," either!

The stockholders of the co-operative market held their annual meeting, put in the same old board of officials, voted not to charge commission any more on sale of goods left in their ice chests; voted to put on free delivery teams, running half-hourly in the morning to all stores, stations and express offices; voted to reconsider a last year's vote against it and go to supper in a body. Sounds like strictly a business affair, doesn't it?

The Waban Rose Conservatories held their annual exhibitory outing and banquet to invited guests who report best one of its kind in all respects and especially in display of fine roses.

Patterson, of Wollaston, opens the bulb season by sending in a few paper whites.

The bottle of grippe preventive lost in the market one day last week has not yet been found; neither have the four or five men who separately visited a secluded corner of the ice chest soon after, yet came down with that disease.

H. E.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

A slight improvement could be noticed in the condition of the market the past week, though there is plenty of stock and the wholesale market is still dragging somewhat. The retail business at some of the places is exceptionally quiet for this season. Some of the West End florists report that they were quite busy with receptions and weddings, and quite a bit of funeral work was reported in the South and North End.

Chrysanthemums are still very much in evidence, and some of very fancy quality, for which the wholesale men say they found very good sale. Timothy Eaton, Major Bonnaffon and Jerome Jones had the call the past week at top prices. A few nice Appleton and Mrs. Perrin also sold well. Good small Ivory are always in demand for work. Top prices on fancy chrysanthemums are $3 per dozen, and from $1 to $2 for good stock.

Carnations are coming in fine and some good fancy stock was seen from Henry Baer, of Peoria, Ill., which brought $3 per hundred. Among them were Lawson and Bradt. Other grades of ordinary sorts run from $1 to $2. Stock is plentiful in all varieties except good white, which always sells well.

In roses, American Beauties are selling well; that is, fancy stock, which is not over-plentiful, but there is a lot of short-stemmed stock in at present. Three dollars is asked for fancy and from that down to 75 cents per dozen on the smaller sorts. It is impossible to clean up the daily cuts at present. The best grades of Bride, Bridesmaid, Carnot, Golden Gate and Meteor run from $5 to $6 per hundred and from that down to job lots at $1 per hundred.

Violets are of better quality and are coming in freely. These clean up almost every day at 50 cents per hundred for choice, with ordinary grades at 35 cents. Lily of the valley is in fair supply and the extra select stock is in very good demand at $4 and $5 per hundred. Some ordinary stock is selling at $3. Bulb stock is slow in coming in. A few Paper White narcissi are in, also a few callas. Romans are looked for by the end of the week.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club meeting held November 12 was well attended and very interesting, it being our annual chrysanthemum exhibition. The finance committee made a very favorable report, which was accepted. Three applicants were elected to membership, Walter Hummell, Max Rotter and Vincent Gorley. Theodore Klockenkemper and John Koenig made application for membership. E. C. Buechel resigned as chairman of the hotel committee and Frank M. Ellis was appointed in his place. Communications were read from Phil Breitmeyer, Baur & Smith, Dr. Wm. Trelease and W. J. Stewart and filed. Six applications were received by State Vice-President Juengel for membership in the S. A. F.

The chrysanthemums on exhibition were very good. A vase of fine Timothy Eaton, shown by Theodore Klockenkemper, took first prize. A vase of Liberty by Wm. Schray & Sons took second prize and Bentzen's vase of Pullman, Modesto and Marie Liger won third prize. The St. Clair Floral Co. also showed a big vase of well-grown Eatons and Mayflower. E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., made a big display of twenty-seven varieties in which were Jean Calvat, Wm. Duckham, Miss Lucy Evans, W. R. Charah, Otaheite, Miss Agnes Henderson, Mrs. Thirkell, Ethel Fitzroy, S. T. Wright, Henry II., Ethelyn, H. W. Buckbee, Convention Hall, Hero of Mafeking, Lidonia, Ida Barwood, Percy Plumridge, and many other good sorts. These were judged as very fine flowers and all worthy of mention. Baur & Smith showed their grand pink carnation, Indianapolis, which was much admired, but suffered some from shipment. The St. Clair Floral Co. showed a fine white seedling from Alaska, No. 10. These looked good. The judges on chrysanthemums were F. J. Fillmore, John Steidel and Otto G. Koenig. On carnations the judges were E. W. Guy, J. W. Dunford and Wm. Winter. The new Breitmeyer rose, which should have been on exhibition, came a day late. This should have been one of the attractions. J. A. Evans, of Richmond, Ind., was present and told us all about the great Indianapolis flower show.

The question box contained many interesting questions and brought out spirited discussions. The trustees announced the essays and discussions for meetings the coming year, which are as follows:

December, "Stem Rot," by James W. Dunford. Discussion, "Heating Greenhouses," led by Max Herzog.
January, "Ferns," by Walter Gillis. Discussion, "Propagating Roses," led by Frank J. Fillmore.
February, "Carnation Growing," by F. J. Fillmore. Discussion, "Propagating Carnations," led by E. W. Guy.
March, "Landscape Gardening," by J. H. Hadkinson. Discussion, "Propagating and Growing Geraniums," led by Henry Emmons.
April, "Pot-grown Chrysanthemums," by George Windler. Discussion, "Field Planting and Growing of Carnations," led by A. S. Halsted.
May, a talk on orchids, by C. E. McClure. Discussion, "Replanting Rose Stock," led by J. F. Ammann.
June, a talk on cactus, by A. G. Griner. Discussion, "Out-door Stock for Summer Blooming," led by Emil Schray.
Discussion for July, "Greenhouse Building," led by J. W. Dunford.
Discussion for August, "The Convention," led by J. J. Beneke.

After this the meeting adjourned until Thursday, December 10, at two o'clock.

Various Notes.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, is in town. Mr. Eschner reports trade never better since the Milwaukee convention.

Julius Schray, of Wm. Schray & Sons, spent a few days in Indianapolis, taking in the big show, and reports a very fine exhibition.

It is said that our old friend, Alex.

Waldbart, will again enter the florists' business, and build a handsome place near Hamilton avenue.

J. F. Ammann's child is reported very sick at Edwardsville, and we hope for a speedy recovery. For this reason Fred missed the club meeting last week.

Dr. Wm. Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanical Garden, was prevented from attending the last club meeting by sickness of his son, which the members regret very much.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week in the parlors of the Lindell Hotel, the American Apple Growers' Congress held its annual convention. The delegates were entertained by F. W. Taylor, at the World's Fair. Henry M. Dunlap, of Savoy, Ill., is president of the congress.

Next month the meeting of the American Society of Naturalists will be held here. This will attract much attention throughout the country. William Trelease will preside at the meeting. Dr. Ross G. Harrison is secretary of the assembly.

J. W. Dunford is in line with a fine lot of carnations. James is never asleep and is always out for the best in the market.

John Steidle is also in the market with fancy cut carnations and violets and John knows a thing or two about growing fancy stock.

Bowling.

The Belleville boys were the guests of the Florists' Club last Friday night for their return match. This time the florists won the match. The scores were as follows:

CINCINNATI.

The Flower Show.

The chrysanthemum show of the Cincinnati florists' society was held Saturday, and it proved to be the best ever seen in the society's club rooms. Both quality and quantity of blooms were there. The show had been liberally advertised by the city papers, and was viewed by a vast crowd of people in the short time that it was open to the public.

Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian,

Mich., made a very creditable display, showing some finely grown blooms, among them being Sunburst, an incurved yellow, very fine color, form and good size. The only draw-back is a somewhat weak neck. Outside of this the flower is ideal and would rank very high. Another new one was Dr. Englehardt, a ball-shaped flower, trifle incurved, of a good medium shade of pink, stem, foliage and size right up to the mark. It appeared to be a good one and scored high. It is a French importation.

H. W. Rieman, of Indianapolis, Ind., also made a large show, displaying a great number of varieties. They also had two seedlings, named Adelia and Majestic, both white. They were not extra large sized, but color, stem, foliage, etc., were good. The latter variety is especially a good thing and will bear watching.

The E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond, Ind., showed over forty different varieties, the majority of them being one bloom to the vase, with all forms and colors. It made a decidedly attractive display and was greatly admired by everyone.

Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., showed the largest sized mums in the exhibition. They were truly immense, one vase of Goldmine being especially noticeable for its size.

J. W. Rodgers staged some nicely grown Bonnafon and also Perrin, which variety is very hard to beat in pink.

R. Witterstaetter made a fine show of mums and carnations. His Col. D. Appleton were the finest I have ever seen, and it is doubtful if they could have been better grown. One vase containing a large number of this year's seedling carnations was very attractive and any of them would have made the heart of an ordinary grower happy. A vase of No. 822A, a beautiful red carnation, was in fine form for so early.

George & Allan staged a vase of Chadwick which were grand, and had it not been that they were too late in staging them, to compete, they would undoubtedly have carried off first prize for best vase of white.

S. S. Skidelsky had with him a vase of the new Breitmeyer rose. They were the same that had been on exhibition at Indianapolis, last week, which proves it to be a good keeper. In other respects it would not be fair to criticize it, under the circumstances.

The awards were as follows: Best vase white, first, E. G. Hill Co.; second, Gunnar Teilmann; third, H. W. Rieman. Best vase pink, first, E. G. Hill Co.; second J. W. Rodgers; third, J. W. Rodgers. Best vase yellow, first, R. Witterstaetter; second, E. G. Hill Co.; third, Gunnar Teilmann. Best vase Bonnafon, first, R. Witterstaetter, second and third, J. W. Rodgers. Best general display, E. G. Hill Co.

The judge, Theo. Bock, was unable to be present, owing to sickness, and Ben George and Louis Pfeiffer officiated in his stead.

There was nothing considered for S. A. F. medals.

After the show the regular meeting of the society was held. There was no business of importance to be brought up, with the exception of a few details in regard to the future shows. Elmer Smith, on his way home from an extended trip east; Harry Sheppard, of the E. G. Hill Co.; Mr. Rieman, of Indianapolis, Ind., and S. S. Skidelsky were in attendance at the meeting and all gave interesting talks regarding the mum shows they had visited recently.

The Market.

Business is just as good as last week which is saying a great deal. Mums still sell well and the supply is heavier than it has been at any time so far this season. They are not bringing quite so high a price, but this is due more to quality than over-supply.

Carnations are about the same as last week. Fancy ones are selling well and a good cold snap would quickly put them up to 4 cents. Short-stemmed roses are still over plentiful, but long ones sell well and more could be disposed of. There is a big demand for American Beauties with not enough to supply it. The best grade brings $4 per dozen readily.

Notes.

Saturday evening a horse and wagon belonging to George & Allan was stolen from in front of the flower market. The thief was caught but not until he had disposed of a good lot of palms which the wagon contained.

Geo. Bayer, of Toledo, O., is sending some very good mums to E. G. Gillett. They are Bonnafon, Ivory, Wana-maker, Helen Bloodgood, and Vivian-Morel.

Owing to the carelessness of a night fireman B. P. Critchell has suffered a loss of from $200 to $300 in his chrysanthemums. Frost entered one of the houses and they are practically a total loss.

H. H. Ritter, of Dayton, O., suffered a severe loss through fire during the past week. His boilers exploded, the boiler shed caught fire and before it could be extinguished the greater portion of five houses was consumed. He carried no insurance.

Those who attended the Indianapolis show from this city returned home greatly pleased with what they saw and loud in their praise of the hospitality or the Indiana boys. The Cincinnati party consisted of W. Murphy, W. Schuman, D. Sunderbruch and wife, J. W. Rodgers, L. H. Kyrk and W. K. Partridge. E. G. Gillett was unable to attend, owing to the death of a near relative.

Ben Hensley, representing Joy & Son, of Nashville, Tenn., was a caller.

C. J. OHMER.

SPokane, WASH.—Hoyt Bros., who now have 55,000 feet of glass, have moved their retail store to 807 Riverside avenue, where Miss Armstrong has charge.

NORWALK, O.—Evans & Peat are building a flower store and conservatory which will compare favorably with those in larger cities. They will be ready for business about December 1.

WINONA, MINN.—St. Paul's parish has had a flower show, each of four florists occupying and decorating a separate room. The exhibitors were the Central Greenhouses, Woodlawn Greenhouses, the Winona Floral Co. and John Wunder.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—Alfred J. Buckleton is a bankruptcy petitioner, with liabilities of $8,538 and assets of $7,000. Fred M. Flagg, of Springfield, and John S. Bogan are secured creditors, holding mortgages on petitioner's real estate to cover loans of $5,800 and $800, respectively.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

With the weather cold, receipts have shortened a little and trade has taken some new life, but there is still an abundance of stock for all requirements, with prospects for plenty for Thanksgiving. The local retailers say it is remarkable how trade has gone against roses. They say Beauty is the only thing wanted in the rose line, and the reports at the wholesale houses bear out this statement, although there is a good call for specialties, such as choice Liberty, Chatenay and Sunrise.

There are and have been plenty of carnations of very fine grade. At no time this season has there been any shortage and it has generally been counted an exceptionally brisk day when the market is sold clean. Of course, there is always some skirmishing to fill particular needs, and cold weather may cut production. Chrysanthemums are selling better now and C. L. Washburn says it begins to look as though it was cold weather, not a flower show, which was needed to enliven business in this department.

Violets are going well, prices, of course, being according to quality and a good twenty-five per cent below last year's average at this time. Valley is very plentiful. A few Paper Whites are coming in. All green goods are plentiful.

The Greek Trade.

Some of the down town retailers are said to be wondering if there is any connection between the fact that their trade is no greater than a year ago, if it is even up to that, and the absence of the sidewalk merchants from the streets. One of those who fought them hardest is quoted as saying that he has about concluded the street salesmen were good advertising for the trade, it being something like a case of "out of sight out of mind" with flowers. Moreover, as most of the Greeks have rented stores, they are now doing business in direct competition with the retailers, handling good stock at close prices. Some of the boys who were driven off the curb have located in other cities, with a buyer here who picks up the job lots and ships them out, greatly to the disadvantage of the wholesale trade, for doubtless there is not a wholesale house which has not heard from one or more good customers who were incensed because of this new form of cheap competition.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club will hold its annual ball at the drill hall in the Masonic Temple on the evening of December 2. A large attendance seems assured. The club held its second November meeting last night.

O. J. Friedman had a big wedding order for Tuesday, for the nuptials of the daughter of Otto Young.

Next Tuesday John Mangel will go to La Porte, Ind., to decorate for the Taylor wedding. The caterer and decorator will go down with a special car.

E. C. Amling says he could supply 3,000 strings of asparagus on notice sufficient to cut the stock. He says the sale for this has increased greatly, but not so fast as the supply. Bunches of plumosus are selling very well.

George Reinberg is getting in a big cut just right for Thanksgiving.

Kennicott Bros. are getting violets from a Wisconsin grower that are easily the best coming to town, and the grower maintains this quality year after year.

Sinner Bros. are beginning to cut sweet peas. They have boxed up about 70,000 Dutch bulbs and Paper Whites. The latter will be in in a few days.

E. H. Hunt reports a big business on wild smilax.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has given the name "Perfect Shape" to the wire work they turn out.

Visitors: Fred Dorner, Jr., Lafayette; A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis; Geo. L. Stiles, Oklahoma; E. S. Thompson, South Haven.

MINNEAPOLIS.

A Progressive Concern.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. has added a new carnation range of 10,000 feet during the past season and an additional 50,000 feet is projected for next year. This place, consisting of 100,000 square feet, is the most extensive in the state. Twenty thousand roses are planted this season. Mr. Monson claims own root stock will produce more good blossoms during the season than grafted stock. Grafted stock is stronger and produces larger and better roses earlier in the season but this is offset by the larger crop from own root stock at the holidays and during the winter when roses are more in demand. All the standard roses are grown and two or three good seedlings from France are very promising, especially for summer bloom.

In the new range erected the past summer he has 10,000 carnations, good strong plants, just now in crop. The leading varieties here are Enchantress, Lawson, Queen Louise, Mrs. Nelson, Crane, Bradt, Prosperity, Apollo, Mrs. Joost and White Cloud.

In the line of violets Mr. Monson has been particularly successful. Last season from two benches of about 2,700 plants he picked 285,000 blossoms, which netted him upwards of $3,000. I don't know whether this would be considered a big crop among the Eastern growers, but in Minnesota it is the record. This season two houses are planted to violets, with about 5,500 plants, and they are looking better than they did a year ago.

A full line of 'mums is grown, some very fine blooms and plants being noted. Bedding plants are also grown, as well as a large stock of palms, ferns, etc. Nearly 500,000 bulbs are planted for early forcing.

Notwithstanding the immense output of this place, Mr. Monson is obliged to buy outside to meet the demand of his increasing trade. He has lately taken the flower stand in Northrup, King & Co.'s seed store, where he does a thriving retail business. X. Y. Z.

INDEPENDENCE, IA.

The home of Florist Bland, of the State Hospital here, was recently the scene of one of the prettiest weddings of the season, the occasion being the marriage of his oldest daughter, Emily, to Archer Henderson. The house was tastefully decorated, the bride and groom standing in a bower of palms, while roses and carnations were used in profusion in the other rooms.

A visit to the greenhouses showed improvements still being made. A new palm house, 35x25, is near completion, being Lord & Burnham's iron frame construction. In the other houses the stock was much crowded awaiting the room which the new house will provide.

Among other things are some magnificent plants of Adiantum cuneatum and grandiceps, also Areca lutescens and the kentias in tubs were very fine. Owing to crowding rendered unavoidable by late building, chrysanthemums had lost some foliage, yet grand blooms were fast maturing. Roses and carnations looked fine. The grounds and plantations all show skillful care.

A brief visit to Florist Bissell found him bright and active for a man of his years. He enjoys a good local trade and has a neat little plant of about 3,000 feet of glass. His roses were not quite so good as usual, but in carnations he would be hard to beat, every variety being in the best of condition, while his Lawsons were the finest I have ever seen. A nice batch of mums in a cool house was promising good returns later, while in a dwarf late chrysanthemum he has something he is not talking about, but is awaiting it to show its true character. Some nice plants of Nephrolepis Pierisoni and Bostoniensis were also to be seen. H. S.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Plant Registration.

C. D. Beadle, Biltmore Nursery, Biltmore, N. C., submits for registration the following named seedling chrysanthemums and announcement thereof is hereby made in accordance with the rules of the society. The description given in each instance is based upon plants grown to single flower in benches.

Miss Birnie-Phillip (Mrs. H. Robinson X Advance). Flowers ten to twelve inches in diameter, of the Japanese incurved type, borne on strong, stiff stems six to seven feet tall; color white with delicate shading of rose-pink at the base of the very numerous rays, the longest of which are five to six inches long and mostly tubular from one to two-thirds of their length. The upper or ligulate portion one-quarter to one-half inch wide, mostly plaited and sometimes cleft or toothed; foliage gradually diminishing in size from far down the stem; leaves large, lively rich green, produced to within a few inches of the flower.

Cziffer (Mrs. H. Robinson X Advance). Flowers eight to ten inches in diameter, of the Japanese reflexed type, borne on stout, stiff stems about four feet tall; color white with creamy tint, the longest of the numerous rays four or five inches long, rarely five-eighths of an inch wide, furrow-veined, plaited or troughed, their bases sometimes obversely channelled, presenting a decided whorled or whirling effect, especially before complete maturity; foliage gradually diminishing in size upwards; leaves of medium size, deep green, produced to within three or four inches of the flower.

Mrs. Swope (Mrs. Higginbotham X Mrs. H. Robinson). Flowers ten to twelve inches in diameter, of the Japanese incurved type, produced on very stout, stiff and straight stems five to six feet tall; color creamy white with slight flush of rose; rays numerous, all but the spreading lower ones, incurved, the inner series very short-tubular, the outer often with the tubular portion extending to or near the apex; they are channeled or furrow-veined, the longest five to six inches long and with the ligulate portion one-half to five-eighths of an inch wide; foliage produced almost to the flower; leaves large, deep green, almost hiding the stem.

Peter Stuyvesant (Mrs. Higginbotham X Mrs. H. Robinson). Flowers seven to nine inches in diameter, of the pure incurved type, borne on very stout, stiff and straight stems four to five feet tall; color rich canary yellow, the longest of the numerous, strongly incurved and symmetrically arranged rays four to five inches long, some of the outermost of which are occasionally tubular to the apex, but usually with the channeled ligulate portion one-half to three-quarters of an inch wide; they are furrow-veined and marked (only on the inner or ventral surface and unnoticeable except on close examination) by lines or dashes of rose-purple; foliage produced almost to the flower; leaves large, deep green, almost hiding the stem.

Rose Sir Thomas Lipton, presented for registration by the Conard & Jones Company, West Grove, Pa., on October 17, 1903, has been duly registered.

SETTING TOMATOES.

At the present time, and as long as the weather continues bright, the setting of tomatoes is a comparatively easy matter, the shaking of the vines during the brightest part of the day being all that is necessary to distribute the pollen, the supply of which is usually so plentiful that some of it will find its way to the stigmas. But with the arrival of the dull days the setting operation entails considerably more trouble. A good deal depends on the varieties grown and also on the suitability of the house provided; the brighter the house the easier the pollinating process can be accomplished. Some varieties supply pollen plentifully, while others are shy pollen bearers. It is well when trying new varieties, or varieties that you are not sure of, to grow a few of Lorillard or some of the old standard varieties, which under average conditions produce a plentiful supply of pollen. It is also a good plan to store pollen when it is plentiful, in preparation for the time when it is not so easily to be had. It is not so much that the flowers do not produce pollen during dull weather, but that the pollen is not set free for lack of sunlight, the action of which is necessary to burst the anther cells in which the pollen is bound. We find a convenient plan to collect pollen is to shake the flowers over a piece of clean glass and lay the glass away in a close box in a dry, warm place, where it will keep in good condition for a considerable time. It can then be applied when wanted by means of a small camel's hair brush. The brush takes up quite a little of the pollen at first, but after it is loaded it will go over a lot of flowers. A bright day should be chosen for the operation, as on such days the stigmas are in better condition to receive the pollen than on dull, damp days.

Society Gives Exhibition.

A "chrysanthemum night" was observed by the New Jersey Floricultural Society as a feature of the November meeting. It drew out the full strength of the society, besides a fine display of chrysanthemum blooms and a sufficient variety of other flowers to prevent monotony. President George Smith staged his big blooms with his usual skill in display, setting them off with crotons and other foliage plants, and the whole against a bank of palms. His mingling of his various carnations produced a finer effect by contrast than had each individual kind been by itself. Peter Duff came from Madison, where he carried off ten firsts. He had reserved some particularly fine blooms for this show, however. Vice President William Bennett held the place of honor, occupying the entire east end of the Elks' assembly room with a pyramidal group set off with Dracæna terminalis and D. Sanderiana. His Balfour contrasted by Garza were particularly effective. Dieterik Kindsgrab's well-grown Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in 6-inch pots formed a graceful screen to the secretary's desk, while the allamanda blooms of John Hayes furnished a fitting mate on the other side to that of Treasurer Macrorie.

In point of attendance the show exceeded any ever held in these rooms and it was found necessary to keep the crowd moving that all might have opportunity of viewing. The only drawback was that it was limited to but one night. It was the most successful in this very successful series in the contest for the four silver cups, of which the next meeting will be the last.

The new rose General McArthur, with a generous vase of Bride carnations on each side, against a miscellaneous backing of new chrysanthemum blooms, staged by John N. May, and the new pink chrysanthemum, Dr. Englehardt, of W. A. Manda, held the admiration of the crowd throughout the evening.

W. A. Manda has added another range of glass to his large plant at South Orange.

George Atkinson's chrysanthemum output is 40,000 this year, which, with the exception of only a small number for local trade, are disposed of among the New York jobbers.

JOS. B. DAVIS.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The F. R. Pierson Co. is still shipping Piersoni in large quantities to every part of the country, but the supply remains unlimited. The 5, 6 and 8-inch pots for the retail florists seem to be in special favor and the immense house at Scarborough devoted to these commercial sizes will be none too large to meet the increasing demand. The weather east has been specially favorable for shipping this fall, and not a fern has been injured by frost to date.

Among Mr. Pierson's exhibits at the flower shows has been his new pink 'mum, Dr. Englehardt, a flower of great depth and substance, with remarkably strong stem and foliage, which he considers the best since Appleton. His new red carnation, Daheim, is striking in its brilliance of color and strong stem. The new yellow 'mum, No. 15, which promises great results will not be sent out until 1905.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

WM. BAXTER, for fifty-one years with W. & T. Smith Co., Geneva, N. Y., died November 12.

W. F. SCHELL, manager of the Wichita Nursery, Wichita, Kans., says they are doing the largest fall business on record, mostly in fruit trees.

F. W. TAYLOR has visited every state and territory in the Union, save Oklahoma, in the interests of agriculture and horticulture at the St. Louis exposition.

STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo., have planted, with cuttings, more than 100 acres of land in the grape belt at Dunkirk, N. Y. Most of the stock is Concord.

AT Omaha two nurserymen, C. H. Green and L. E. Greene, became involved in an imbroglio because of mistaken identity, each repudiating orders taken by the other.

A. PINOTEAU, superintendent of parks at Montreal, is planting a great many shrubs this fall, to replace bedding plants, the use of which has been abandoned in many situations.

PROF. H. T. FERNALD, entomologist for the state of Massachusetts, has just completed the annual inspection of nurseries and reports them very clean. Last year eighty places were inspected, this year 110, the increase being mostly florists' establishments, where some nursery stock is carried.

J. L. PHILLIPS, state entomologist, at Blacksburg, Va., has issued the following circular:

On November 5 I examined a large lot of nursery stock in Roanoke while it was being delivered by the agent, and found a large percentage of the apple trees seriously affected with crown gall, and a smaller number badly injured by the woolly aphid. In one order of some 800 apple trees I found 125 trees so badly affected with crown gall as to render them entirely worthless.

The object of this notice is to call the attention of purchasers to the fact that the Virginia law prohibits the sale of nursery stock affected with San Jose scale, woolly aphid, crown gall, and other diseases that need not be mentioned here. Purchasers cannot be required to pay for stock of this character, no matter if it is covered by certificates of nursery inspection. The stock in question came from outside this state and carried the inspection tags, but notwithstanding this it was badly diseased.

WEST BADEN, IND.—The West Baden Springs Co. is building a large greenhouse near the hotel.

GAINESVILLE, GA.—J. E. Jackson has just completed three houses 10x100. Early frost killed outdoor stuff October 24 and all Mr. Jackson's 'mums went also.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—F. H. Kramer opened his handsome new store at 916 F street N. W., on November 17. A neat invitation was distributed and brought many visitors.

UTICA, N. Y.—The Utica Florists' Club had a very successful little trade show November 10, followed by a supper. Many of the introducers of novelties sent exhibits for inspection.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.
Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

THERE seems to be anxiety on the part of bouquet green jobbers to cover their sales.

WHAT per cent will be delivered on contract sweet corn orders is an important question just now.

BEANS are drying slowly; there will likely be a delay in the delivery of contract orders owing to this.

WORK on the catalogues is being pushed and there seems to be a shortage of novelties as well as of cucumber seed.

THE farmers in the northwest are interested in the macaroni wheats, and many will sow them for trial next year.

THE Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., has an output of some 2,000 barrels of tomato pulps, which they sell to a catsup maker.

VISITED CHICAGO: H. W. Jones, of the Sioux City Seed and Nursery Co., Sioux City, Ia., on his way home from northern Michigan.

THIS cold snap has caused a hustle among the onion set growers to get winter quarters for the scattering lots that are still left in the open.

J. C. ROBINSON, of Waterloo, Neb., calls attention to the fact that his circular on the cucumber seed situation was wrongly credited in our last issue.

THE liabilities of the Cape Vincent Seed Co. are scheduled at $28,907 and assets $40,076. A debt of $25,000 to the United National Bank is in dispute.

ROGERS BROS., of Chaumont, N. Y., are offering a novelty in the way of a new pole bean, the Golden Carmine. The new pea, Dwarf Champion, is another of their introductions.

E. L. OSBORN, formerly manager of the Plant Seed Co.'s interests at Petoskey, Mich., is reported as about to engage in seed growing under the name of the Petoskey Seed Co.

As we go to press the local pickle men are holding a convention at the Palmer House, Chicago. Information of value bearing upon the cucumber seed situation could probably be picked up from those in attendance.

OWING to full deliveries in general of crops from the Pacific coast this year and a doubt as to what the coming demand for such seeds will be, makes rougher sledding than ordinary for the growers from the coast who are looking for advance contract orders.

NOTHING new has developed the past week to alter the corn and cucumber situation. Things remain about as they have been, and anyone who is well enough posted to give definite figures covering the probable quantities in sight or the actual value of either cucumber seed or sweet corn is in hiding.

THE southern and southwestern trade are eager for part shipments of their contract orders, and the jobbers are doing their best to make the shipments as complete as possible.

RALPH M. WARD & Co., 17 Battery place, New York, opened for business November 2. Mr. Ward was formerly with Hagemann & Meyer and later a partner in Hagemann & Co. With him are his brother, C. Wayne Ward, traveling salesman, and J. H. Thomas, office manager.

THE Southern Seed Company has been incorporated at Louisville, Ky., with $50,000 capital, and indebtedness limited to $100,000. The incorporators are James F. Tinsley, of Richmond, Va., 195 shares; P. G. Tinsley, of Nashville, 75 shares; A. D. Ladoux, of New York, 30 shares; R. S. Merimee and T. H. Merimee, of Louisville, 50 shares each, and Ed. C. Foltz, of Louisville, 100 shares.

WHEN harvesting Dobbie's Golden Ball turnip seed this summer at Orpington, writes Wm. Cuthbertson, in the Gardeners' Chronicle, I was struck with the appearance of a remarkably fine plant. I had it saved by itself and thrashed out. The weight of seed was 8¼ ounces. I counted the seeds in 1-16th of an ounce, and found they numbered 1,120, which works out 147,840 for the 8¼ ounces. Thus a single seed sown in July, 1902, has reproduced itself 147,840 times in a twelvemonth.

MANY of the jobbers are sceptical as to the scarcity of sweet corn. They argue that plenty of the seed will develop later on. The only fear entertained is that the germination may be poor, on account of the soft condition of the ears as they are taken from the shocks. A great proportion of the chits, when they are picked out of the cob and examined, show a blackness which is not liked by those who are posted. How much this will affect the sprouting of the grains is a question, and it will have an important bearing upon the quantity of sweet corn available for seed.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Quantities of all kinds of flowers are arriving in this market and the demand is only fair. The mild fall weather is bringing along large quantities of chrysanthemums and roses. In fact roses and chrysanthemums are a glut and hard to move at respectable figures. So far mums have not affected the demand for Beauties in the slightest; the supply is large and the quality extra fine. In miscellaneous roses, the fancy varieties have the call, the minor grades remaining unsold. Some very choice Golden Gate and Ivory are being received. Carnations are not blooming as freely as other seasons, but it's a good fault just now, as their scarceness keeps up their prices a little. Quantities of sweet peas and California violets are arriving and find a good market. Smilax is very plentiful and Sprengeri scarce.

Notes.

Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, is sending the finest Jerome Jones seen in this city; in size and quality they will hardly be equaled in the country.

Blind Bros. are cutting some very fine Niveus.

The Pittsburg Rose and Carnation Co., at Bakerstown, is shipping quantities of extra fine Maids and Brides to the Cut Flower Co.

Among the retailers, Randolph & McClements, A. W. Smith, Breitenstein & Flemm, L. I. Neff and T. M. Ulam, report good business with weddings and other festivities.

Mrs. E. A. Williams furnished the decorations for the Consistory banquet at Duquesne Garden last Friday; the work was elaborate and costly.

Geddis & Blind are making a fine window display with chrysanthemums at their Fifth street store.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving some very choice sweet peas, longiflorum lilies and mignonette.

E. C. Ludwig is handling a great variety of very beautiful out-door pompon chrysanthemums. Hoo-Hoo.

CHICAGO, O.—John Klink has sold his greenhouses to George H. Meyers and will leave for Cuba in a short time.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.—Greene & Underhill have paid their creditors a first and final dividend of 75 per cent in their bankruptcy case.

GARRETTSVILLE, O.—S. C. Temple has been at Ravenna to judge the flower show and reports it the best amateur display he ever saw.

Monday's weather was disagreeable and the horse show opens under cheerless skies, but society will make itself felt in the flower market before the week is over. The football game last Saturday caused a ripple, especially on violets and yellow mums. The tendency of prices is upward. In a few days chrysanthemums will be scarce, violets will hold the advance and good roses will no longer need to appeal to buyers at starvation prices.

Take pleasure in calling your attention to their unrivalled collection of Wreaths. Among them are the new Statice or Scotch Heather Wreath, a beautiful green, exquisitely shaded; the Ruscus Wreath, closely resembling a wreath made of Smilax; our well-known Magnolia, Beech and Laurel Wreaths in green and brown foliage, and many others. These Wreaths can be decorated with a bunch of flowers, tied with a bow of ribbon, or dotted with immortelles to give variety and finish. You will find them a paying investment. Address

CLEVELAND.

The business situation here shows a slight change for the better. Cuts are lighter, and an increased demand is felt for all lines, but there is still plenty of stock to fill all orders, and some of it goes at prices that are too low to mention. Most of the stands in Sheriff street market showed some very fine mums on Saturday, but sales were slow, and prices very reasonable.

In the recent death of M. A. Wilhelmy, Cleveland loses one of its oldest florists, he having been engaged in this business for a great many years on Pearl street, opposite Riverside cemetery, where he did a very successful business until about three years ago, when he retired, leaving his sons, C. B. and E. A. Wilhelmy, to carry on the business. The funeral was from his late residence on Saturday afternoon and many beautiful floral pieces were sent by his friends in the trade.

E.

DAYTON, O.—The greenhouse establishment of H. H. Ritter was practically destroyed by fire November 8.

LANCASTER, N. Y.—J. H. Rebstock, of Buffalo, has bought the S. B. Smiley greenhouses and will operate them in connection with his other business.

CHARLEROI, PA.—Theo. J. Allen has recently lost his wife and has leased his establishment to W. R. Maebius, of Warren, Ohio, who will conduct it while Mr. Allen spends the winter at Orlando, Fla. It is an up-to-date range of 14,000 feet of glass. A house 44x100 is planted in carnations, one 24x100 to roses, one 18x100 is given to 'mums and one 12x100 to palms.

PACIFIC COAST.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.—W. E. King will have a good cut of asparagus for Christmas.

MENLO PARK, CAL.—M. Lynch has some very large chrysanthemums, Western King being the largest among the whites. Outside bloom is early this season.

ELMHURST, CAL.—A. Massey has just put in a new heater. His stock is in extra fine form, carnations especially. Estelle, Enchantress, Cressbrook, Hill and Prosperity are the varieties grown. His Prosperity are grand and sold last winter at $1.25 per dozen.

SAN FRANCISCO—Ferrari Bros. have just completed a new engine house of concrete and installed three new steam boilers, in all 200 horse-power, oil burners. They are now receiving from Europe large shipments of bulbs and other stock. At the greenhouses of John H. Sievers & Co. the orchids are beautiful now. So are the carnations. Hanna Hobart holds her own, but Adolph Spreckels is right after her. Both are aristocrats. The former will make her debut in 1905, the latter will be held in subjection longer. Another new house has just been completed at this place. Cox & Co. have a fine lot of Australian tree seedlings in great varieties. They appear to be very successful in handling this stock.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.Carnations.

Redondo, famed for its fine carnations, is about to increase its output. A company is being formed that will put in thirty acres, so by this time next year the stores of Los Angeles will be better supplied than in the past.

The Redondo Floral Co. has several acres planted from which blooms are cut the whole year, which is not possible anywhere except in southern California. This company also has two houses, each 15x200, planted to carnations, and doing well.

Henry Flieder, who made the carnations of Redondo famous, has his acres in fine shape, and is cutting fine blooms. He is still adding to his prosperity and popularity among the craft.

Mr. Wolfskill, another Redondo grower, has moved to Los Angeles where he has built several houses which he has planted to carnations that are coming along in grand shape under the skillful handling of Mr. Joe Watson, which goes to prove that carnations can be grown under-glass just as well in Los Angeles as in San Francisco or New York.

The Ocean Park Floral Co. is another firm growing out of door carnations on a large scale. Their gardens are located at Santa Monica, where the climate and soil is the same as at Redondo.

The difference in soil is so great that carnations cannot be as successfully grown in Los Angeles as in Redondo in the open field. The Redondo soil is hard to describe and it is harder to understand how it can have the vitality which it certainly has. It contains no clay, or even what you might call loam. It resembles sea sand except that it is dark brown in color. Its value lies in the fact that it is composed of minute particles of sea shells. When taken in the hand it makes one think he is handling corn meal. But it will grow anything that is planted in it and it can be worked any day in the year. It can be flooded with water and a few hours later can be spaded, plowed or cultivated. But around Los Angeles the soils are too heavy for carnations and need good stable manure and sand to lighten them up.

San Diego is another good carnation growing country, and a good field for investment in that line. There is practically no frost and plants grow 365 days in the year. Poinsettia, stephanotis, Bignonia venusta, bougainvilleas, etc. do as well in the open air in San Diego as they do in stove houses elsewhere.

The Los Angeles stores are looking well. Carnations, roses and chrysanthemums are the principal flowers at present. Business was never better and the city never more prosperous. The number of new buildings in course of construction is amazing, and the prophecy of a city of 250,000 by 1910 seems destined to be realized.

H. B.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had a drizzling rain for the past few days and it is playing havoc with outside stock, much to the delight of the rose and carnation growers, who, by the way, have not fared any too well the way prices have been for the last month. Business is quiet all around and stock is moving very slowly. Chrysanthemums are still as plentiful as ever and can be had at the lowest prices imaginable. Violets seem at last to be really plentiful and the wholesale price has fallen from $1 to 75 cents per dozen bunches, during the last two days. Carnations are selling as follows: Portia, Joost and Scott, 15 to 20 cents per dozen. Flora Hill, Crocker and Estelle 20 to 25 cents per dozen. Lawson and Prosperity at 25 to 30 cents per dozen and fancy stock at 3 dozen for $1. I look for these prices to rise somewhat during the next week if the weather continues unfavorable. Roses are getting somewhat scarcer and good Beauties are in very short supply at present. They are bringing from $1.50 to $2 per dozen wholesale today and short stems at about half that price. Brides and Maids sell at from 50 cents to 75 cents, according to quality. Kaiserin and Testout are holding their own at about the same price. Souv. du Pres. Carnot are worth 75 cents and Liberty 50 cents per dozen. The best inside white chrysanthemums sell today at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen, and best yellow varieties at about the same figure. Outside grown flowers of the same size, but of course not of as fine texture or length of stem, can be had at from 25 cents to 50 cents per dozen, and smaller flowers at from $1 to $1.50 per hundred.

Smilax is very plentiful and brake ferns are getting longer of stem. Valley is not plentiful and is quickly bought up.

Notes.

It is rumored that Mayor Schmitz will appoint William J. Dingee, a son of the founder of the Dingee & Conard Co., a park commissioner. Mr. Dingee has done a great deal for horticulture in California, and for many years his grounds near

Mrs. G. P. Thomas, of Ocean View, is cutting violets in large quantities at present. She has a large trade both in this city and Oakland.

ST. PAUL.

With plants still in flower in the open ground and with the greatest crops of indoor bloom ever known, it is no wonder that trade has been a little dull and flowers have gone to waste. The stores have all been filled to overflowing and, while sales have been fairly good, they could easily have been doubled without exhausting the supply. Roses are especially abundant and of fine quality. Carnations are also coming in quite freely, though there is no apparent glut in the market. Violets have suffered somewhat from the warm weather. Even 'mums are hanging their heads.

Last week the annual flower show was on and every one was busy.

OMAHA.

The Market.

Trade, generally speaking, for the past week was very good. While everything sold well, there was a special demand for Beauties and chrysanthemums. The week was marked by the demise of several prominent people, and the debut of the daughters of several equally prominent families. Chrysanthemums, of course, are the leader and Omaha has seen some grand blooms with plenty more coming. Nothing in the newer varieties is seen, but it seems the ones we have could scarcely be improved upon.

Roses have been a trifle backward, the effects of our very wet autumn, but are now rounding into excellent shape. Carnations, too, are making great advancement, and the indications are the winter will produce the finest flowers we have ever seen.

Notes.

Alfred Donaghue, Jr., will open a modern store at Sixteenth and Farnam streets, about November 25. Mr. Donaghue, having no glass of his own, will draw on his father, who has greatly increased his plant this summer.

The annual meeting of the Nebraska Florists' Society was held November 12. Election of officers was the order for the evening. Vice-president S. R. Falconer was elected to succeed J. J. The retiring president and secretary, with George Sorenson, were made trustees. B.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Exhibition.

The Rhode Island Horticultural Society held its annual chrysanthemum exhibition November 12 and 13. The two principal exhibits were by Farquhar Macrae and his brother, John A. Macrae. This year John rather led his elder brother by taking almost all the first prizes, Farquhar taking about all the second places. This is quite a turnover, as it has been the other way the past ten years. Howard Almy had a fine vase of twenty-five Timothy Eaton. E. J. Johnston had three of the finest vases of Eaton, Balfour and Jones, twenty-five each, receiving first prize on the Jones, which were especially fine. Wm. Appleton put up a very neat showing of palms and foliage plants, getting a special prize. Wm. Hill, private gardener, also put up a fine showing of foliage and chrysanthemum plants. There were some very good roses and carnations shown by the Messrs. Macrae; also violets. There were a good display of fruits, preserves, jellies and honey. The attendance was poor.

The Florists' Club of Rhode Island held its regular monthly meeting November 12, nominating officers and appointing committee on annual banquet to be held at the January meeting.

The Market.

Business has been dull so far this fall, no large decorations and only a little funeral work. The weather has been too balmy for good business. There is a abundance of all kinds of good flowers. Plants go slowly. The department stores offer sword ferns, rubbers and palms from 19 to 89 cents, no choice stock, however; it's a good outlet for such stock. We look forward to Thanksgiving for a starting point for good business for the winter.

Notes.

Eugene McCarron reports good business in funeral work and landscape work.

T. J. Johnston and his foreman, E. G. Brooke, Jr., visited New York and the great show the past week. R. I.

TORONTO.

The Market.

The past week has been making quite a stir so far as the floral trade is concerned. Though general sales cannot be stated as much above the average, yet our two large department stores made quite a display during the week. They held what they called "floral shows," lasting three days each. Much comment has been made by our retail florists generally, upon these two shows, and while it is not for me to comment upon the respective merits of these exhibits, I would say that I believe the shows had a good effect upon the trade generally. These two large concerns, with unlimited means of advertising, did more to bring flowers generally before the buying public than the average retail florist does in a lifetime.

Notes.

The Toronto Horticultural Association held a chrysanthemum show November 17 and 18, of which, of course, at time of writing we can say nothing, but that preparations look favorable for a good exhibit.

We hear that a new flower store is to be opened on King street by a Toronto lady. The location is in the neighborhood of our two largest cut flower dealers.

J. S. Simmons is sporting another new wagon, which eclipses anything hitherto seen in the trade in Toronto and in fact it is doubtful if there is a delivery wagon in any line of business in the city that will compare with it.

W. J. Lawrence is now cutting his first good roses this season. "W. J." kept his houses in late and supplied the market with fine stock during June and July, consequently he was late in coming in this fall.

D. J. Sinclair has just received into stock a large shipment of German baskets.

I have been using your Fumigating Powder for the last three years and find it very effective. It is cheaper than the extracts and does not shrivel the carnation as stems do. Smoking two nights in succession will kill the green fly.
